Foreword

In 1956, Ernest Miller, Springs, Pa., who was chairman of the Joel B. Miller Reunion Committee for that year, urged Olen L. Miller to begin work on a genealogy of descendants of this pioneer Miller. The task was begun promptly and questionnaires were sent to relatives in many states. As is always the case in such work, much time and labor were involved and in the years after the beginning and at the present time, which marks the completion of the task, our cousin has devoted much energy and attention to make the product worth while and helpful.

It is not entirely complete because time and its changes, in addition to other causes, render it impossible of perfection. But we, the descendants and friends of these Millers, wish to express our interest and gratitude for the efforts to compile this volume of information, which all who are interested in family trees and branches will appreciate.

Since he was a little boy, Olen L. Miller had been interested in family history and especially in his own ancestry and in preserving relics and mementoes of their lives and ways. Articles made by his father, who died when he was a little boy, and by his grandfather and inherited by him were carefully cared for because he cherished and treasured them.

He has many characteristics of his Miller ancestry. Among these are mechanical and inventive genius as is evident by a number of inventions of his, two of which have been patented. His favorite work is patternmaking for castings in foundries, many of which are his own models. He is also an expert cabinetmaker and woodworker and finisher.

Miss Alta Schrock, or shall we say Dr. Schrock, who has written the "Miller Story" of this book has been an understanding and appreciative lover of nature from childhood. Her mother was accustomed to finding the little girl roaming the woods and fields when she could not locate her around the home. Her grandfather, Jacob Miller, and great-grandfather, (Posey) Samuel Miller, loved flowers and trees and this proclivity was not in any manner lost in her. She has personally planted hundreds of trees and shrubs in her home community around Springs, Pa., and in various college and university areas where she studied and taught. Other youngsters in schools have been helped through her leadership to appreciation and practice of woods and plant lore. Some of her close friends even yet know her as "Chip" in remembrance of her work and leadership with a tree and plant club years ago.

She has always loved to write. Many of her articles have been published on various subjects and she is at this time writing a book about her grandfather Miller. She always appreciated the handiwork of her ancestors and in every way she could, tried to preserve such articles. Her efforts in this line took on added proportions in about 1935 when she began a long series of interviews with the oldest residents concerning pioneer practices. She has a wealth of such information on file. This includes material she gathered in eight months of research in European areas such as the Palatinate in Germany, Alsace, and Switzerland.

We might mention her educational achievements, which include her doctor's degree from the University of Pittsburgh. She has taught biology at Bluffton, Goshen, and Oberlin colleges, American University, and Frostburg State Teacher's College. We should also speak of her untiring efforts in the establishment of Springs Historical Society and Museum, the annual Springs Folk Festival, and the Penn Alps Corp. It has been her delight to encourage and use God-given talents.

For almost three years (1951-54) she served as a relief worker under Mennonite Central Committee in war-torn Germany, following her term of service with historic research in several European countries.

Time moves on. Our dear friend Ernest has passed on. Olen L. is not as young as he once was and Dr. Schrock has been heard to say she no longer is the Chip of tender years.

We want to be duly appreciative of the virtues and work of our ancestors. We also want to be real men and women in our own right that we may draw lessons from their mistakes to avoid them. When time changes to eternity and the present to that which is to come, may our lives have been in tune with what God intended for us and the world better because we have lived it it. It may even now be later than we think.

The Miller Story

3 1833 03115 3692

Introduction

Just when our line of Millers came to America is not known, but careful research in Berks County, Pennsylvania, from whence they came to our Allegheny highlands, may eventually serve to span the bridge between Europe and America. In spite of months of research in Germany and Switzerland, the writer was never able to find that first immigrant—partly because of Napoleon's conquest of Germany (with destruction of records) and partly because our ancestors dared not keep church records for fear of religious persecution.

Although no definite knowledge of our immigrant forefather has been established, research in the archives of Bern, Switzerland, seems to indicate that the early Reformation seats of Anabaptist Müllers were lofty Sigriswil, overlooking the blue-green Thunersee and the beautiful valley of the Simmental to the south. Some were imprisoned, and others may have lost their lives for preaching the Gospel to an assembled audience other than their own families. All active church workers lost their property, which according to the records was extensive in many cases. After Jakob Ammann founded his new faction late in the seventeenth century and moved into Alsace to win converts, one or another of the Müllers seems to have been his constant companion over the years.

In spite of our ignorance concerning our first ancestor to come to America, we do have knowledge that penetrates to the foot of Blue Mountain in eastern Pennsylvania. Our first known American ancestor was John, who came to America some time prior to the Hochstedler massacre by the Indians on the evening of September 19, 1757, near Shartlesville in the shadow of Blue Mountain. John was the father of our ancestor, Jacob, who was the father of Benedict, who was the father of Joel B. Miller, of whose descendants this book is a record.

The writer owes much to scores of persons interviewed over a period of 25 years, and also wishes to acknowledge the aid given by the late Floyd J. Miller and wife Fanny, as well as that of his brother Evan J. Miller, in checking on early records. She likewise wishes to point out that there was no intention to discriminate among the descendants of our common ancestor, but the pattern and completeness of material used was governed by availability of information.

Our First American Ancestor, John

The Family of John Miller

According to the late Captain Charles Hoye of Sang Run, Maryland, our first known ancestor, John Miller, Sr., was married to a Catherine Hochstedler of Berks County (whose ancestry is not known to the writer). Both John and Catherine died before 1798, according to Hoye. Children born to this union were Jacob (our ancestor), born in August, 1754; John (Annas), DJH-9154, who moved to Ohio in 1815 (presumably after the Indian scare was over); Christian, DJH-9162, who settled in the Berlin Glades and became a community patriarch was widely known as "Glades" Miller; Peter, DJH-9163, who settled at the foot of Hunsrück near Meyersdale; Joseph, DJH-9169, who settled in Conemaugh Township; Mrs. Joseph Speicher and Mrs. Christian Speicher of Somerset, Pennsylvania; Mrs. Jacob Kauffman, DJH-9173; Mrs. Christian Mishler, DJH-9174; Mrs. John Schrag, whose children appear in fam. DJH-2863; Barbara, wife of Jacob Hochstedler, DJH-3.

According to Captain Hoye, Garrett County historian, our first known ancestor, John Miller, came from Berks County to the Berlin area in 1772, and took up 300 acres of land, 10 improved. If this is true, he must have preceded his son Jacob and family by 10 years.

It was the opinion of the late J. B. Miller that John Miller, Sr., was buried near the present site of the Sand Patch tunnel in the vicinity of Meyersdale, and that excavations during the construction of the tunnel eradicated all signs of his grave. It is hoped that future research may reveal more concerning the movements of John in Somerset County, as well as giving us a clearer picture of his life in Berks County prior to his migration westward to our beautiful Alleghenies.

John and the Indian Massacre

The story of John and the Hochstedler massacre has been handed down both through our own (John-Benedict) line of ancestors and through the descendants of Jacob's youngest sons, the brothers of Benedict, who accompanied their father to Ohio in 1808-9. (See p. 17.)

As the story goes, John was working for the Hochstedlers near a gap in the Blue Mountains in Berks County, plowing in an open patch, when he noticed an unusual cloud of smoke rising from the Hochstedler clearing nearby. Thinking of the tales of recent Indian massacres, John left his rude plow and was turning to flee into the forest when several Indians burst into the clearing from the direction of the burning homestead. John turned on his heels and fled for his life, disappearing into the forest with the speed born of fear, and soon lost his pursuers among the dense trees.

That this story is widespread among the descendants of John's son (our Jacob) is evidenced by the following incident. When the late Wilbur Miller of Holmes County, Ohio, was a student at Goshen College, he related the above story while visiting at the home of Harry Miller, DBH 3838, thinking he had a unique pioneer tale to relate. When told by his host that the same story had come down through the descendants of Benedict (and his son Joel B.) the young man was amazed. Since Wilbur was a descendant of one of the sons who accompanied their father Jacob to Ohio in 1808-9, the writer feels that the authenticity of the legend is underscored.

Another version of the tale is given by Harvey Hostetler in DBH, page 26, footnote 17. In this version John was chopping wood at the time of the massacre and was shot through the hand by the Indians. (Mr. Hostetler thinks John may have been the son of John Adam Miller who was massacred by the Indians a year previously.)

Jacob the Pioneer

The Family of Jacob Miller, Sr.

Jacob Miller, DBH-3312 (son of the above John Miller, DJH-9146), Shanesville, Ohio, at death, was born in August, 1754, in Berne Township, Berks County, Pennsylvania, and died February 22, 1835. He moved from Berks County to Somerset County some time after May in 1782, according to the record in the old family Bible of his son John, which was studied by the writer. He married Anna (Nancy) Stutzman, DBH-3312, who was born April 12, 1755, in Berne Township, Berks County, Pennsylvania, and died March 27, 1814, just five years after moving to Ohio. She was the daughter of Christian Stutzman, the granddaughter of Jacob Stutzman, and the great-granddaughter of John Jacob Stutzman, who arrived in Philadelphia October 7, 1727, on the ship Adventurer from Rotterdam, Capt. John Davies, Master. Her mother's maiden name was Barbara Hochstedler, DBH-1, daughter of Jacob Hochstedler, DJH-1, one of the survivors of the Hochstedler massacre.

Jacob and Anna Miller had only four children—all sons. The oldest son was John, DBH-3313, who was born in Berks County, Pennsylvania, lived for a time in northern Somerset County, later in Garrett County, Maryland, and moved to Holmes County, Ohio, about 1811. His photograph appears on page 66. The second son was our own ancestor Benedict, DBH-3450, father of Joel. The two youngest sons were Henry (born in Berks County, May 23, 1782), DBH-4593; and Jacob (born in the Berlin Glades area, Jan. 11, 1787), both of whom went with their father to Holmes County, Ohio, in 1808, set stakes in this raw Indian territory, and remained there the rest of their lives.

Glimpses from Jacob's Life

The age of John Miller, Sr., at the time of his moving to Somerset County is not known, but his son Jacob* was twenty-eight years of age, and Jacob's children ranged from infancy (Henry) to four years of age (John), with our ancestor Benedict approximately one year old. They must have moved after May 23, 1782, as this is the date of Henry's birth in Berks County. That Jacob remained in the Berlin Glades area until at least 1787 is evidenced by the fact that his youngest son, Jacob, was born there. Some time between 1787 and 1793 he found his way through the dense forest southwestward of Berlin and settled at the foot of Negro Mountain on what was later known as the Sam Davis (now Floyd Brenneman) farm. According to reliable sources relayed by P. S. Davis, Jacob built the old log house and planted the apple orchard which was reported to have appeared old in the middle 1800's. He no doubt also built a simple log barn, which was replaced by a larger one by his son Benedict after the turn of the century (see Early Land Holdings). Jacob's initials were found by the Davises on an old foundation stone on the premises, but this stone is no longer in evidence.

* Refers to our direct line of ancestry

Although no artifacts known to have been made by our ancestor Jacob are preserved in the Springs Museum or in homes of the area, the writer believes that he must have shared the ingenuity of his brothers and his talented descendants. That he was a pioneering soul is evidenced by his moving from Berks County to northern Somerset County at the age of 28, to the Negro Mountain area at the age of 40 (or earlier), and to Holmes County, Ohio, at the age of 56. Neither his son Benedict nor his grandson Joel gave evidence of this same restless spirit, although they had many and varied land dealings throughout their adult lives (see below).

The Millers Take Root in Ohio

L. A. Miller of Arthur, Illinois, wrote in a personal letter dated March 8, 1950, "Among the first settlers in Holmes and Tuscarawas counties were Jacob Miller in 1808 with two sons. He helped them build log cabins, then went back home, and made a few trips during the year on horseback. Then the following year (1809) he moved to Ohio himself. He was my great-great-grandfather on my mother's side."

Captain Charles Hoye gave the same dates for the moving as does the Mennonite Yearbook of 1909. The Millers apparently took with them the nephew of Mrs. Jacob I (Anna Stutzman). This young man, Jonas, was known as "Weiser" Stutzman, because he often was dressed in white from head to toe. The wife of Jacob II spread a white cloth on a chair on the lawn for him when he came to call on the family.

The late Enos Mast, a great-great-grandson of Jacob I (our ancestor) said that the Millers came from Pennsylvania in a Conestoga wagon. This hung in the barn for almost 140 years, and was finally destroyed by a descendant who grew tired of it! Mast also believed the three Millers (Jacob I, Jacob II, and Henry) had a sawmill on their place to facilitate building and that they lived on adjoining farms.

Mast (born 1863) further related the story of the flight to Maryland and/or Pennsylvania at the time of the Indian uprising in the new Ohio country. The Millers loaded their Conestoga wagon, including some household treasures and supplies. Due to weight, the wagon broke down when crossing a creek on the Miller homestead. So they unpacked and buried some heavier objects in a bank on the other side of the creek, repaired the wagon, and fled back home to Somerset County. They presumably fled in 1812 and returned to the new homestead three years later—in 1815! Upon returning they dug for their treasures in the bank, but found only ashes. The Indians had found the hidden material and burned it as a symbol of defiance.

Since Jacob I had a son by the same name, the Ohio settlement called him Alt Yocklie and Jacob II Yung Yocklie. The latter is said to have founded the Amish Church in Ohio.

According to Welfley's History of Somerset County and other reliable sources, Jacob Miller, Sr., served as bishop of the Amish Mennonite Church of the Casselman Valley. Rev. Harvey Hochstedler in his Descendants of Jacob Hochstedler states that Bishop Jacob Miller probably preached the first sermon in Holmes County.

According to Enos Mast, the Millers fled back to Pennsylvania and Maryland during the Indian scare of 1811 and remained there until 1815. They fled in the old Conestoga wagon.

Father Benedict

Benedict Miller, the father of our ancestor, Joel B. Miller, (often written Bendig or Benedick by his contemporaries) was born November 19, 1781, in Berks County, Pennsylvania. He was about one year of age when his father Jacob moved westward to the Berlin Glades in what was later Somerset County (see DBH-3313). He married (1) July 17, 1803, Catherine Beachy, daughter of Peter Bitsche II and Sally Blauman (DPB-68), who was born November 20, 1778, and died September 23, 1884. Born to this union were Henry, April 23, 1804-Feb. 28, 1824; Peter B., DBH-3451; Miriam, DBH-3537; Salome, DBH-3706; Catherine, DBH-3762 and DDB-563; Joel B., Fam. 1, DBH-3817; Susanna, DBH-3903; Elizabeth, DBH-3980; Benedict, DBH-4089; Barbara, DBH-4159; Moses B., DBH-4361; Jacob B., DBH-4528. Benedict married (2) Catherine Eash, widow of Nicholas Keim, who later married Peter Livengood. To this second union were born Magdalena, DBH-7174; and Lydia, DBH-6900.

Benedict was a faithful member of the Amish Mennonite Church and was ordained minister in 1809 and bishop on Whitmonday, 1813. He died June 11, 1837, and is buried on the old homestead near the present village of Springs, Pennsylvania, on the farm owned by his great-grandson, Amos J. Yoder.

The following extract, taken from The Descendants of Barbara Hochstedler, tells of his selection for the ministry in 1809.

"Jonas B. Miller, Grantsville, Md., sends a copy of votes taken in the selection of a minister by lot for the Casselman Valley District, for parts of Somerset County, Pa., and Garrett County, Md. The names voted for are: Yost Miller, 42 votes; Hannes Gnagey, 10; Benedict Miller, 6; John Hochstedler, 1; Peter Miller, 1. At the time of his selection for the ministry, he had already sold his farm and was planning to move to near Shanesville, Ohio, with his father and brothers, Henry, and Jacob. His selection to the ministry decided him that his place was in the ministry among the people that he had been chosen to serve, and he arranged to buy his farm again that he might remain and preach the Gospel."

That Benedict was a man of real talent, as well as a progressive, pioneering spirit, is evidenced by a number of stories which have come down through the decades.

Craftsmanship

There is considerable evidence that our ancestor, Benedict, was a man of no mean abilities, and a good craftsman for his day. Colonel Jim Johnson of Garrett, Pennsylvania, has a very fine, well-balanced spinning wheel (still in use) with Benedict's initials carved in the wood. A number of tools and pieces of metalwork are also found in the Springs community—some in the Springs Museum. There is a hand-forged name plate for a Conestoga wagon toolbox, dated 1829. There are various hammers, soldering irons, and garden tools, as well as early animal traps attributed to his skill. (All persons who can find any artifacts made by Benedict are urged to place them in the museum for safekeeping.) According to the testimony of his descendants, he built a log carpenter shop and no doubt one or more blacksmith shops on his farmstead. It is thought by informed descendants that Benedict was largely responsible for training his son, Joel, to become such a fine craftsman.

Ingenuity

A Miller legend that has been handed down five generations is the story of Benedict and the corncrib. Our ancestor, so the story goes, had a corncrib in his springhouse loft with a ladder or stairway leading to it. One day he began to miss corn. As the matter grew worse, Benedict finally decided to set a trap to catch the marauder. One morning while the Miller family was at breakfast a shout was heard coming from the direction of the corncrib. Upon investigation, the figure of a man was seen at the entrance to the crib.

"Good morning," called Benedict, "do you need help?" "Yes," replied the man. "Could you release me from this trap?" "Oh, are you caught?" asked Benedict innocently. "Yes, I can't get loose." "I'll release you on one condition," returned the host. "What is that?" muttered the crestfallen visitor. "I'll release you, provided you come in and eat breakfast with us," was the answer. "Oh, but I'm not hungry," replied the "guest." "But that is the only condition under which I'll release you," insisted Benedict. "All right, I'll come in with you," the man finally replied.

At the breakfast table the talk turned on all sorts of subjects—all subjects, that is, except the missing corn. When the guest finally left after a hearty breakfast, the two men were friends. No Miller corn was missing from this time on.

The Iowa version of this story (stemming from Benedict II) adds that Benedict gave the man a bag of corn when he left. In either version we see a pointed lesson in practical and charitable nonresistance in action.

Another tale relates to the disappearance of corn from Benedict's bins at another time. Noting the dwindling supply, our inventor ancestor drove nails into the ends of the cobs, and when he next missed corn, he paid a visit to the suspected neighbor and commented on the cobs in the pigpen. The neighbor denied any connection between the cobs and Benedict's stores, whereupon the latter stooped and picked up a cob and pulled a nail out of the end. "Here is one of the nails I drove into my corn," he said quietly, looking at his crestfallen neighbor. No more corn was lost from Miller's bin after this incident.

Pioneering Spirit

As will be evident from the discussion, "Early Land Holdings of Jacob and Benedict," our ancestor loved to tame the wilderness and convert forest tangles into productive farms. He, like his fathers before him, took over land from the Indians during the early period of settlement in these hills, the land being designated as "vacant" and granted him by the land offices of Pennsylvania and Maryland at various times. In a number of cases this land was later sold to recent immigrants at reasonable figures, and the writer is inclined to believe that this is one of the primary reasons for his extensive purchase of lands.

In the matter of education Benedict was an equally pioneering spirit. Before any school building had been erected anywhere in the Springs area, Benedict invited parents of the community to bring their children to his humble log house for instruction (as related by the late Gideon Miller, a great-grandson). He is supposed to have said, in defense of his little home school, "The children must learn" (Die Kinder müssa lerna).

In 1836, about one year before his untimely death, Benedict built a log schoolhouse on the present site of Springs. This was the first school building at Springs and the fourth in Elk Lick Township. It stood between the present site of Elmer Bittinger's garage and the famous Chestnut Spring and store of the late F. W. Bender (where the road now leads to Upper Springs). Bittinger himself saw the logs as they were dug up, and the northeast corner of his little office room corresponds with the northwest corner of the old school building. In 1844 this humble structure was replaced by a "better house (built by his son, Joel), as noted by William H. Welfley in his Somerset County History (see Joel B. Miller biography below), and in 1858 Benedict's grandson, Samuel J. (Fam. 2), taught school here, at the time of the school record reproduced in this volume (pp. 72, 73).

As early as 1830 Benedict had two of his children vaccinated, as is evidenced by a note dated April 13 of that year. Joseph Stutzman received pay for the same on November 15 of the same year. When one realizes how recently many parents have been willing to accept this medical practice, this pioneering act of our ancestor seems the more remarkable.

Churchmanship

That Benedict was highly esteemed for his church leadership is evidenced by the readiness of the Amish brotherhood in Germany to consult him in matters pertaining to church policies and problems. The writer has gained this information from numerous sources, but in all the stories related, only one name was mentioned—that of Peter Miller, the German minister who crossed the ocean in 1837. Evidently Miller himself had frequently consulted our ancestor in his line of duty as minister to a church in the process of change. It is said that he rejoiced greatly when he had the opportunity of embarking for America, as he would now be able to speak face to face with the churchman who had given him so much assistance by letter. The immigrant was deeply disappointed and saddened when he learned upon arrival that Benedict had passed to his reward while he himself was en route on his long ocean voyage. Later on Peter Miller settled in the area of Aurora, West Virginia, and the story filtered through to the Springs-Meyersdale community through Mrs. Kate Hershberger, Lewis Beachy of Gortner, and Bishop Joe Yoder, Meyersdale, R.D., Pennsylvania.

After his father and brothers had moved to Ohio, Benedict rode regularly (several times a year) across the raw, newly penetrated Alleghenies to visit his relatives and preach in the new Amish church in the Walnut Creek, Ohio, area. A great-grandson (Gideon Miller) once related how Benedict was received by a German tavern keeper in Wheeling, West Virginia, where he put up for the night. Benedict was asked to preach to his fellow travelers at the inn. This he did with a poise born of deep conviction, rising graciously to the unusual challenge confronting him.

Some years ago the late Simon Maust told the story of a sermon Benedict preached to his own flock here in the Alleghenies. He was holding forth in a plea against profanity and compared the term for timothy hay with a profane reference to the Deity. "I know what timothy hay (Hay demit) is," he told his audience, "but Gott demit I do not recognize." Benedict had no use for profanity in any form, and chose to use a play on words to drive home his point.

During the years when Benedict was bishop and shepherd of the little flock in the hills, conveyances were extremely rare in out-of-the-way places and it was commonplace to ride horseback for hundreds of miles, if need be. Our ancestor's parish was indeed a scattered one, reaching from the Maryland hills (Bittinger area) to present Meyersdale and beyond. He, as did his successor, Jonas Beachy, found it necessary to spend much time in the saddle in all kinds of weather. Whether this had anything to do with his untimely death, we will probably never know. We do know that he had his people's interests at heart, and spared himself not at all to fulfill their needs.

Benevolences

The benevolences of our patriarch ancestor were well known among the people of the hills. A rather striking evidence of his concern for others is the planting of apple trees along the highway for the benefit of wayfarers. There are also legends that he grafted these trees, as did his great-grandson, Jacob S. Miller, generations later.

When Tommy Lee, an Irish orphan boy, found his way into the Amish community at the foot of Negro Mountain, he could not speak German and was apparently taken advantage of by some of the local residents. Benedict learned of his plight and paid Tommy's debts by giving his creditor corn and eggs from his own farm. He no doubt allowed Tommy to earn this provender by working for him, for Tommy seems to have learned his skill in woodworking in the Miller shops, both in the time of Benedict and later on in the days of Joel.

The statement which records the above transaction (read by the writer after it was mysteriously found on the streets of Salisbury some 120 years after being written) is an interesting one indeed. It is written in a quaint mixture of English, High German, and Pennsylvania German. Benedict, who was untutored in English, was apparently trying to use that language for the benefit of the Irish lad who needed help.

Throughout his short but full and useful life, Benedict had the heart and mind-set to help not only his neighbors and the Amish brotherhood of which he was pastor, but also the people of like faith who immigrated from the motherland. Time after time, so the story goes, Benedict brought recent immigrants to his home to aid them in becoming established in a new and strange land.

The story which is perhaps most clearly outlined is that told by C. W. Bender, son of the principal of the pioneer tale. When Wilhelm Bender, DDB-563, came to America in about 1830 at the age of 15, his traveling companion, Peter Kinsinger, paid Wilhelm's passage. When the two young men disembarked in Baltimore, they encountered a nurseryman who paid Kinsinger the amount of the passage, with the understanding that Wilhelm would stay as a "redemptioner" until the debt was paid by his labors.

Upon leaving Bender, Kinsinger traveled west along the old

National Road and joined the Amish settlement in Somerset County, Pennsylvania. When Bishop Benedict Miller learned that Wilhelm was bound out as a "redemptioner," he was quite disturbed and determined to redeem the young Amishman. As the late Joel Kinsinger told the story, Benedict expressed himself thus, "This will never do! He is one of us, and we must get him up here!"

Suiting his actions to his words, the patriarch mounted his horse and rode the some 190 miles to Baltimore, bought off Bender, and brought him to his farmstead (later known as the Amos J. Yoder farm). When his daughter, Catherine (Katharine), heard the news, she said, "Who knows; maybe he will make a husband for one of us!" She spoke more truly than she knew, for in April, 1838 (approximately one year after her greathearted father passed to his reward), Catherine did indeed marry the immigrant who had been befriended by her father.

One of the last benevolences Benedict was able to perform for his community was the sheltering of the George Folk family on New Year's Eve, December 31, 1836, when the Folk home (present Jake Otto homestead in Springs) burned to the ground. It was a bitter cold night, so descendants say, and the pioneer family had to build a roaring fire* in the fireplace to keep from freezing. Two children perished in the flames, and the oldest son, John (one boot lost in the shuffle), clasped his infant sister in his arms and fled to the Benedict Miller home for shelter. The surviving members of the family huddled about the embers of their home while John hurried back to carry the rest of them through the sub-zero night before they should perish from overexposure. Our generous-hearted ancestor welcomed the Folks cordially and sheltered them until a new log house could be constructed on the foundations of the old (the present Jacob J. Otto place). Since Benedict died on June 11, 1837, the sheltering of the Folk family may have been one of his last deeds of benevolence.

Early Land Holdings of Jacob and Benedict

in (present) Garrett County, Maryland, and Somerset County, Pennsylvania

Since so little is known of the life and activities of our direct ancestors, Jacob and Benedict Miller, it seemed desirable to make full use of any available records, both in courthouses and among old family papers. This has been done, with the result that a very interesting and often enlightening story has been pieced together for those who care to read this section of the Miller Story.

According to the record in the family Bible of Benedict's brother John, DBH-3313, their father (see p. 13), Jacob Miller, with his three oldest sons (including our Benedict, aged one year) moved from Berks to Somerset County, Pennsylvania, in 1782. The family apparently settled in the Berlin Glades area, and was still there as late as 1787 when the youngest son, Jacob, was born.

Ida Musser (Hay), a descendant of Christian ("Glades") Miller, born in 1860, once told the writer that her grandsire and his brother (our Jacob) took up hundreds of acres of land and settled together in the Stonycreek area.

In 1787 military lots in Maryland (3767 and 3768) were allotted to a Jacob Miller. An old yellow document examined by the writer is dated November 10, 1789, and pertains to four lots (2058, 2071, 2072, 2079) "of . . . land in Washington County,* according to the act of the General Assembly passed in the November session, 1788." Although no name is mentioned on the paper, the writer believes it refers to land purchased by Jacob, since it was included among other old papers of this ancestor.

That Jacob was well established at the foot of present Negro Mountain in Somerset County, near Springs, Pennsylvania, by 1793, is evidenced by the land warrant dated that year, now in possession of the P. S. Davis heirs, descendants of the family which succeeded the Millers on the old homestead (the farm is still spoken of as the Sam Davis place). Sherman has always believed that Jacob was the original white man in the immediate territory, and that he built a log house and planted an orchard very early, as the old orchard contained the largest apple tree he had ever seen. The eight graves in the burying ground above the old log house were mute evidence of the same.

* Washington County was the forerunner of Allegany County, Maryland.

The story has come down through generations of descendants (the Daniel J. Miller family) that Jacob took up this land from the Indians. He evidently built a tub mill very early, as is evidenced by an old (large and very long) log with mortices, taken out of Tub Mill Run by the Davises in 1894 when they built a dam and drained it. It is thought he may have built this mill for making barrel staves of white oak. This tract of land bought by Jacob had a peculiar shape, with an extra little triangle of land bought to include more stream for water power. According to reports of early pioneers, there was also a "still house" on the property, which no doubt accounts for the large orchard. An old stone with Jacob's initials was likewise found on the premises.

The Millers Cross the Mason-Dixon Line

That Jacob still owned land in what is now Garrett County, Maryland, in 1798 is evidenced by the first land assessment of Allegany County, erected that year from former Washington County. At that time Jacob was assessed with 300 acres of land (a part of the Mount Nebo tract) valued at £125. At the same time his oldest son, John (brother of our Benedict), was assessed for three horses and seven head of cattle, no doubt in the same locality. Among Jacob's old yellow papers, dated February 7, 1798, is an indenture between Daniel Gorman of Fayette County, Pennsylvania, and Adam Fadley of Somerset County. Fadley agreed to pay Gorman £950 for the "woods called Mount Nebo, and the woods containing three hundred acres, be the same more or less." The land at the time was occupied by Jacob Bugh. In a second old document it becomes apparent that another agreement was made, to the effect that Jacob would pay half of the purchase money owed Gorman by Fadley. Although he was at the time a resident of Elklick Township, Somerset County, Pennsylvania, he was definitely a landowner in the Mount Nebo area of what was then Allegany County.

In 1800 the census of "Sandy Creek Hundred" (Allegany County), reveals that Jacob Miller's name is still on the census list.

By 1801 Jacob's son, Benedict, must have taken over the farm at the foot of Negro Mountain, for this was the year, according to the late P. S. Davis, when the barn was built by Benedict. It was constructed of large white oak timbers, hewed entirely with a pole ax which was no doubt made by Benedict himself. The log house and the "still house," both of earlier vintage, were probably built by his father, Jacob, years earlier.

In 1804 both John and Benedict Miller were resident taxpayers in "Sandy Creek Glades Hundred," the Mount Nebo area which is now a part of Garrett County, Maryland. Well-known contemporaries of the time were William Thistle and Jesse Tomlinson, several of the earliest settlers of the area, whose signatures appear on numerous documents of our ancestor. At that time "Old Grantsville" had a few houses and a blacksmith shop, but there was no post office in the entire region.

In 1805 Daniel Gorman, for £1,000, deeded 300 acres* of Mount Nebo to Jacob Miller, of Somerset County, (In 1810 Jacob deeded half this Mount Nebo tract to Emanuel Custer, and in 1814 he deeded the remainder to his son, Benedict.)

Land Transfers from Jacob to Benedict

In the spring of 1808 Jacob, with his sons, Henry and Jacob, made the trek to Ohio and entered a section of land about a mile northeast of present Sugarcreek, Ohio. They were the white pioneers of the area. Apparently Jacob's two youngest sons stayed, but Jacob returned to the Alleghenies (where his oldest sons John and Benedict resided) to settle his affairs. An account of the moving of Jacob from Somerset County, Pennsylvania, to Holmes County, Ohio, appeared in the Mennonite Yearbook of 1909, just 100 years after he went to join his sons (in 1809). It is not clear to the writer just where Jacob resided during his last years in the Pennsylvania-Maryland mountains, but it is almost certain he had land holdings in both states. Because Benedict was ordained in this year, he stayed in the east instead of moving to Ohio.

* The same land for which Jacob was assessed as early as 1798.

According to the late Floyd J. Miller (who had studied the military lot record book now housed in the courthouse in Oakland, Maryland), Benedict, in 1813, bought several lots in Old Grantsville, which had street names at that time. This transaction was acknowledged before a squire at Little Crossings (now Stanton's Mill) and the land was bought from his father, Jacob, who was at the time in "Tuscaraway County in the state of Ohyo." It is noteworthy that this is the year Benedict was ordained bishop on Whitsunday.

According to records in the Cumberland courthouse, purchases made in this year must also have included some of the Mount Nebo land which his father, Jacob, had allegedly taken up from the Indians. The record refers to "all that part of a tract of land called Mount Nebo," Allegany County, Maryland, "on the waters of the Little Crossings." This includes 150 acres, and the witnesses of the transaction are Jesse Tomlinson and Thos. Parkinson. This deed was recorded on June 13, 1814, in Book G., p. 387, which also places the seller in "Tuscaraway County in the state of Ohyo." A note following on the next page states that Jacob's wife, Nancy (Anna) Miller, did "release and relinquish all her right and claim of dower" in connection with this land.

Benedict Prepares to Reduce His Holdings

On June 30, 1814, a special warrant of resurvey was granted out of the Land Office for the Western Shore to Benedict Miller of Allegany County, to resurvey part of a tract of land called Mount Nebo to "amend all errors and add any contiguous vacancy and reduce the whole into one entire tract." The original tract contained 145 acres and two pieces of "contiguous vacancy," 208 acres, making a total acreage of 353, "to be held by the name of 'Miller's Delight,' " resurveyed the first day of June, 1815. This document was signed by Benjamin G. Vaughan, surveyor of Allegany County. (It might be noted in passing that Benedict B., a son who later settled in Iowa, was born May 20, 1815, in the state of Maryland. One might therefore conclude that Benedict, Sr., was living on Mount Nebo at the time.)

On February 2, 1818, a land transaction involving Benedict was recorded. He sold to David Mellinger a one-half acre lot (apparently in Old Grantsville) on Allegheny Street, with a frontage of 100 feet and a depth of 218 feet, with buildings and improvements. Witnesses were Jesse Tomlinson and William Ridgley.

On August 17, 1818, there was recorded an agreement between Benedict Miller of Allegany County and Charles Worthington of Montgomery County that Benedict sell Worthington "all that tract or parcel of land whereon the said Miller now resides, called and known by the name of Miller's Delight, as patented to him. . . ." Worthington agreed to pay $4,800.00, the first installment to be paid on or before April 15, 1819, on which date Benedict was to furnish a deed and give possession. Worthington also agreed to pay Benedict "an eagle" to transfer the title, and Benedict agreed to leave five sheep, a grain fan, one beehive with bees, and to plow the "lower field" for oats.

In 1819 (indenture dated April 14, deed recorded August 19) Benedict apparently bought of Worthington, for the sum of $1,000, a tract of 353 acres. The purchase price would indicate that the tract our ancestor bought from Worthington was much smaller than the one he sold this gentleman. He seems to have been shrinking his operations in Maryland, probably because of his extensive duties as minister and bishop of his scattered flock.

On May 12, 1819, Joseph Tomlinson of Allegany County transferred to Benedict eight acres of a tract Tomlinson had been granted by the Land Office for the Western Shore (February 1, 1819). This apparently became part of a 45½ acre tract of land called "Tice's Dismiss." The deed was recorded in December, 1820. The writer is somewhat at a loss as to the significance of this purchase as well as its location.

Our Ancestor Acquires the Old Beachy Homestead

On January 1, 1821, a deed between "Peter Beche," Sr., and "Benedick" Miller (Peter's son-in-law) was entered, and the same recorded April 21 in Book VIII, p. 631. Benedict's wife is likewise mentioned in the record.

The record also states that Peter "Beche's" patent for the land in question bore the date 1788 and was granted him by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. It was named "Barr Kelt" (see Fig. p. 68) and consisted of 417 acres (Rolls Office of State of Pennsylvania, Patent Book 14, p. 145) at the time Beachy purchased it. Apparently Benedict bought from his father-in-law 281 acres, 120 perches of the total tract. No doubt Peter retained the rest, and the writer believes that it later was turned over to his son, John (Hannes or "Starick Hans Beachy"), who allegedly once owned what was later to become the Wilhelm Bender and Emanuel Hersberger properties.

Also in the year 1821 (indenture, March 29, deed recorded, April 19) Charles Worthington of Allegany County sold to Benedict Miller of Somerset County, Pennsylvania, a tract of land called Mount Nebo. At the same time there was another resurvey on Mount Nebo called "Miller's Delight," as by patent bearing the date December 21, 1816. Since Benedict is mentioned in this document (dated March 29, 1821) as being a resident of Somerset County, it is apparent that he must have moved to his father-in-law's farm between the first of January and the last of March. It is the opinion of a number of informants that Benedict bought the old Beachy farm when prices were high, and that he asked for a concession on the part of the heirs from whom he bought the land. This concession (evidenced by their signatures) was granted in the form of a reduction in the price of the land.

During the year 1822, "Benedick," now of Somerset County, Pennsylvania, sold to John Tieback (Ziebach?) for $225.00 parts of lots "westward of Fort Cumberland." (Book O, p. 1.) (Ziebach was a poor immigrant.)

On January 10, 1822, the Stone House Inn on the old Cumberland Road (later National Pike) became a Federal post office known as "Tomlinsons." Captain Thomas Endsley was the first postmaster, and our Benedict's mail was henceforth addressed to "Tomlinsons" or "near Tomlinsons."

On October 23, 1824, an indenture was drawn up between Joshua Stanton of Allegany County and "Benedick" Miller of Somerset County, for the sum of $225.00. Our ancestor bought the tract from Stanton. Lots 2120 and 2121 and one half of 50 acres of adjoining land became part of a tract called "Addition" (apparently later called "Miller's Addition to Grantsville"). The document reads, "beginning at a bounded white oak . . . from the end of the tenths line of Mount Nebo." Joshua Stanton made his mark, and Jesse Tomlinson and Adam Little were witnesses. This, no doubt was in the region of Grantsville or Little Crossings.

In the year 1825, on April 19, a deed was recorded for 219½ acres in Allegany County. The land, called "Stock Farm," was sold to Benedict by Benjamin Gist Vaughan for the sum of $200.00 and lay next to the "Bear Camp" tract.

During this time Benedict was still having a rough time with wild animals on and near his land. An old document reads, "from William McMahon Colb [to Benedict] for shee wolf scalps and a painter scalp, by your tax for 1825."

In 1827 Benedict Miller of Somerset County sold to John Kempel of Allegany County for $81.00 a tract of 81⅜ acres "known and distinguished by the name of 'Dutch Settlement.'" Witnesses are George Bruce and Jesse Tomlinson. (O, p. 2.)

Back in Maryland

On November 8, 1828, a final warrant of escheat was granted by the Land Office of the Western Shore to Benedict Miller of Allegany County, "the said Benedict Miller being the first discoverer thereof and desiring to purchase the same may obtain a grant thereon . . . add any vacant land thereto contiguous." It was to be resurveyed and reduced to an "entire tract." Lot number 2124 had 47⅛ acres and lots 2121 and 2078 contained 50 acres each. With the addition of a few more acres of vacant land, the total tract amounted to a little more than 150 acres, "to be held by the name of Underwald." This was resurveyed by Benjamin Brown, surveyor of Allegany County, on Christmas Day, 1828. Improvements were 1,760 rails at ten cents each!

Also on November 8, 1828, in a letter postmarked at Annapolis, Henry Maynadier wrote to "Mr. Benedict Miller near Tomlinsons, Allegany County, Maryland," acknowledging receipt of $5.00 with request to secure escheat warrant on the above lots. From the above it would appear that Benedict may have moved back to Maryland some time before November, 1828.

In 1829, according to old records, Mr. B. Miller of Allegany County apparently paid Henry Maynadier a sum for some (unidentified) tract of land. The money was sent to the land office in Annapolis, but the name of William Beatty of Baltimore appears on the document also.

On February 17, 1832, a deed was recorded for 219½ acres of land known as "Stock Farm" which our Benedict sold for $109.00 to Christian Swartzendruber of Allegany County (probably a recent immigrant). About the same time he sold to Jacob Brenneman and Tiebach (Ziebach) a total of almost 160 acres of land. From the records it is fairly certain that these two gentlemen also had only recently come to America from Germany, and Bishop Miller was no doubt helping them become established. Swartzendruber and Brenneman were two of the leading Amish patriarchs of the New Germany area, and were the progenitors of Iowa families of these names.

The Last Return to Pennsylvania

Between 1829 and 1833, Benedict must have again moved back to Pennsylvania, as an "articuel" of agreement between Benedict Miller of "Summerset County" and Michael Chrise would indicate. The article is dated February 27, 1833, and states that a certain tract of land in Maryland is to be leased to Chrise for five years "to build a cavn house [cabin] hereon and cut down the corners, likewise two flowers [floors] and two windows with six lites each, likewise a smawl stable, likewise the said Chrise to clare five akers theron and put it under a good and safisien fense. . . ."

Bearing the date of June 17, 1833, postmarked at Elkton, Maryland, and addressed to Mr. Benedict Miller, Tomlinson's Post Office,* Allegany County, Maryland, an indenture between Joseph Bryant of Cecil County, Maryland, and Benedict Miller of Somerset County verifies the writer's surmise as to the whereabouts of our ancestor during these years. For $100.00 Bryant sold every part of that parcel of land in Allegany County "laid off for Capt. Thomas Mason of the Revolutionary in the Maryland Line." The lots in question are numbered 2058, 2071, 2072, and 2079, and contain 200 acres. The agreement included all improvements, buildings, waterways, etc. On July 9 of the same year a tract of 200 acres of land "more or less" was sold to Benedict by Joseph Bryant of Cecil County, Maryland. This was apparently wild and uncleared land, for Benedict bought the whole for $100.

Nothing has been found concerning Benedict's activities and transactions in 1834, the year a post office was opened in Grantsville; but on June 6, 1835, another recording was made of "Barr Kelt," the farm Benedict had bought from his father-in-law in 1820. In a paper by Leo J. Beachy, Autobiography of a Nature Lover and Historical Notes of Garrett County, Maryland (in writer's possession), Beachy concludes that Benedict, in 1835, built an addition to an old log house on Mount Nebo. Since this was later the Jonas Beachy home, the writer of the article took a special interest in the history of the building. Beachy writes as follows:

"1835, Philip Durst, John Durst, and Peter Miller (son of Benedict), what printers we are." These are the words that are printed on a pine shingle found in the yard that the wind had blown from the roof of our old dilapidated log house, and by consulting the oldest person in the neighborhood, Lydia Custer, about the printing which was still very good, it was discovered that those were the three carpenters who had nailed the shingles on the roof.

Beachy continues by saying that Thomas Thistle probably built the older part of the house and the log barn much earlier. 1807 was chiseled on the stone of the old log barn, to which Benedict, or his son Peter, apparently built an addition in 1835. Since Peter was married in 1828, he may well have been the chief person involved in the expansion of the old log house while his father continued to reside in Pennsylvania. In fact, an article of agreement dated February 19, 1838, states that Peter (brother of our Joel) had settled with the administrators of his father's estate. Benedict, however, must still have owned property in the Mount Nebo area of

Allegany County at this time, for he was still paying taxes there in 1836.

The Miller Lands Are Divided

During the last few years of his life Benedict seems to have been less active in buying and selling property and real estate. After his untimely death on June 11, 1837, there were some legal proceedings to settle the estate among the heirs. An inquest was held July 20, 1838, and confirmed by court September 3, 1838. At this time Thomas McKaig was appointed trustee, with authority to sell real estate.

An old document dated April 12, 1838, makes it clear that Jeremiah and Joel Miller (our ancestor) were administrators of the Benedict Miller estate; that some eight or nine heirs had $300.00 each given them; that the widow was to receive a total of $1,000, over a period of a year; that Joel was to serve as guardian of his minor brothers, Moses and Jacob; that Jeremiah Miller (unidentified) was to serve as guardian of Lydia and Magdalena (children of Benedict's second marriage) and Barbara Keim (relative of his second wife). Joel received $471.70 for his guardianship and Jeremiah $636.47 for his. Apparently Peter had a claim against him, and this was doubtless the reason for the court proceedings. (See p. 33.)

On August 18, 1838, the following tracts of land were sold to Taxley H. Thistle: numbers 2058, 2071, 2072, 2079, containing five acres, and also a tract of land known as "Mount Nebo," and the resurvey on Mount Nebo called "Miller's Delight" the former containing five acres, and the latter 353 acres, more or less. This was sold for the sum of $2,780.00. McKaig paid $500.00 for the execution of the sale, and I. Fechtig and Daniel Blocher were witnesses.

On April 16, 1839, Joel took over his father Benedict's farm, according to the record. The note says he "took persetion of said farm," involving 340 acres and 62 perches. So far as we know, his entire life of productivity was centered on this farm, and it was from this base that he served as the benevolent patriarch of the community. The restlessness of his father Benedict, his grandfather Jacob, and his great-grandfather John, which induced them to move from farm to farm and state to state was apparently no major factor in the life of Joel. That the latter had considerable land holdings in the region of Grantsville and Bittinger in Maryland is known by persons now living. Research into recent court records would reveal much of interest in relation to these holdings, and the writer would warmly encourage any interested descendant to pursue such research.

The final chapter in Joel's land dealings was written on May 20, 1884, when a deed between Joel B. Miller and wife and John D. Yoder (son-in-law) was recorded in Deed Book, Vol. 65, by A. A. Stutzman. Joel at this time sold for $9,000, 231 acres and 112 perches of the old homestead. He had apparently sold some earlier, for his original purchase totaled 417 acres in 1820. At the time this last deed was drawn up, Joel and his wife reserved "the house" they now live in [probably the little Grose-daudi house behind the main house], the two shops [blacksmith and carpenter] ; the small garden, and the square now used by them "in the large garden ; also pasture and hay for one horse." They reserved the right to "all the milk and cream wanted for their use, and also free access to all kinds of fruit produced on said farm to use for themselves as needed."

Our ancestor must have had a premonition that his end was near, for he passed to his reward little more than a year after this deed was made. The little house which he built with his own hands (winding stairway and all) is still standing back of the Amos J. Yoder home, and the "still house" was torn down only a decade or two ago.

Our Ancestor, Joel B. Miller

Joel B. Miller, sixth child of Benedict and Catherine (Beachy) Miller and common ancestor of the some 500 families of this book, was a man of unique and outstanding qualities—a respected leader in the rural community which he so actively served throughout his lifetime. More than any other local person who has come to the attention of the writer, Joel played the role of patriarch of church and community.

General Characteristics

In appearance, Joel was neat and tidy, even when very young. As a youth, so the story goes, he was riding horseback along the National Road (then the "Cumberland Road") some miles from his home when he was overtaken by a stagecoach. As the driver stopped and questioned the young rider, amazement was expressed at his neatness, cleanliness, and well-combed hair. One gathers that his appearance noticeably excelled that of the average young man of the backwoods.

In maturity, Joel was of medium build and is said to have most resembled his fourth son, Joel J., who later served as bishop of the Amish Mennonite brotherhood near Grantsville, Maryland. Edward Miller, grandson of our ancestor, Joel B., remembers that his grandfather had one of his fingers cut off approximately at the knuckle. This doubtless happened in one of his shops while working with his hand-operated tools. Two distinctive features mentioned by all who knew him are his full, bushy beard, graying at the edges, and a rather large harmless tumor on his forehead. The tumor was apparently not disfiguring, for it was said by many who knew Joel and his wife Catherine that they were one of the handsomest couples in the Amish Church at the time.

Among the outstanding traits possessed by Joel was his magnificent deep bass voice, of rich and ringing quality. Many persons who knew him spoke of the soul-stirring influence of his voice, particularly in the role of song leader or "singer" during church services while he sat at a small front table and led the congregation in the old German hymns of the Liedersammlung. Brother C. W. Bender, now well in his 80's, recalls how the first song in the old hymnbook, beginning with a long-drawn "O-h-h-h!" fairly brought tears to his eyes as he listened to the rich, full quality of the voice of the elderly man at the front of the church. But Joel did not restrict his singing to religious services, for persons coming upon him unexpectedly in one of his shops often heard him singing softly at his work.

In speech Joel was a plain-spoken man—direct and to the point but never harsh, rude, or sarcastic, to the knowledge of the writer. Any expression of opinion followed mature deliberation, and often began with, "Es iss woo-o-o-hl," in a slow musical drawl. Editor W. S. Livengood, who had frequent contact with Joel in his boyhood, declared that he spoke English without an accent, the best English spoken by any "Dutchman" (referring to Amish and Dunkard) he had ever met. Joel was also considered a superior penman for his day and could write and speak English when few of his Pennsylvania German contemporaries could do so. Most of his accounts and home remedies are entered in his books in this acquired language.

In qualities of mind and spirit, Joel was above the average. The late Joel Kinsinger spoke of him as the "shrewdest man around," and added, "He could temper anything." His grandson, the late Jonas B. Miller, spoke of his superior reasoning power. C. W. Bender tells the story of a farmer whose apple trees were doing poorly. Said Joel to the farmer, "Remove the sod from under that tree so that the birds can get at the worm that is spoiling it." Editor Livengood used the word "expeditious" in describing the capacities of this Amish patriarch.

According to the testimony of his grandchildren and admiring associates, Joel was kind and friendly in his attitude toward others and almost always in a good humor. Over the years his benevolences became known in church and community—kindness to immigrants being one of his major fields of philanthropy. One immigrant whom he was instrumental in bringing to America (paying his passage) was Christian Guingerich. Afterward "Chris" worked for Joel, and one day while hoeing the garden, Chris destroyed all the pumpkins, as he had never seen any before and thought them weeds or Unkraut.

He also took in Henry ("Henner") Beitzel during the latter's first days in America and gave him a home and a job. After Henry had been in the Miller home for a time, his brother Louis decided to follow him to the land of opportunity, but the time of his departure was not known by the Miller household. One day (in 1856) when Mother Catherine was at home alone, a strange young man with a broken cane came knocking at her door. She took one long look at the young man, and seeing a striking resemblance to his older brother, greeted him with a ringing welcome (resorting to her mother tongue). "Ah, here comes Ludwig!" she exclaimed, revealing by tone and countenance all the warmth and hospitality so innate to her personality. Descendants of the lonely young immigrant still speak of the joy that overcame their ancestor upon receiving such a cordial welcome. Little wonder that Henry often told his daughter, the late Mrs. John Klotz, that he had heard that Joel's was a good place for homeless immigrants who needed work. On the strength of this he had found his way to the Miller household and stayed for seven years, and while there wrote his brother Louis of the good fortune that he might share upon coming to America.

Later on when the Beitzel brothers were ready to settle down for themselves, Joel sold them land on easy payments. Henry purchased some of Joel's land in the area known as "the Glades," near Bittinger, Maryland. The tract comprised 150 acres, and he bought it for the sum of $800 ($200 down and $50 yearly). At another time Joel sold Henry's brother, Louis, 214 acres, "all that I hold on the west side of the Casselman River."

John and Josephine Shura, a German immigrant couple, lived at Joel's when Sam Hershberger (born 1875) was a little boy. They, too, had found a home in a strange land and one of the things they most enjoyed in the Miller home was the privilege of rocking in a comfortable rocking chair, a pleasure almost unknown in their homeland. After a period of adjustment, according to the late Katie Hershberger, the Shuras settled on the Benjamin Tressler (now Homer Livengood) farm and became part of the community at the foot of Negro Mountain.

One of Joel's benevolences had to do with a practice which the Amish churches in the Alleghenies have banned completely—the distillation of brandy and similar beverages. Whereas the charge to regular or lay customers was forty cents per gallon, he sold it to preachers for only seventeen cents! Before we condemn our patriarch ancestor too strongly, we should pause to consider several facts: the moderate use of distilled beverages was not frowned on at the time either in Europe or America, and secondly, mild use of the same was considered essential for hard work such as haying, barn-raising, log-hewing and similar chores. There is plenty of evidence that our forefather was always moderate in the consumption of his distillate, but over the years others were not equally moderate; so the church finally banned completely both the production and use of this form of refreshment.

Joel's benevolences were known and appreciated not only in his own brotherhood and community, but spread far beyond to persons of other faiths and communities, as the need arose. Mrs. Henry Figgy, a widow in Grantsville whose husband died of diphtheria in 1878, had bought a town lot from Joel where the Methodist parsonage now stands, and could not meet her payments. According to the late Cindy Figgy Durst, the administrator "tried to cut her off," but Joel told the widow, "The administrator cannot take the lot from you. You make the payments when you can, and don't worry."

It is evident that his benevolences and helping hand included not only his relatives in the Alleghenies, but also extended to his cousins in other states. A letter dated 1871 and postmarked "Amish, Johnson County, Iowa," comes from his brother Jacob's son Christian. The young man is apparently in dire need of funds and is asking for a loan of $600 at his uncle's earliest convenience.

Community Leadership

Joel's community-mindedness manifested itself in many ways. When approached concerning the possible sale of his spring (later known as Chestnut Spring, at present Springs, Pennsylvania), he said that he would not sell this excellent source of water, as it must be kept open for the public.

In community enterprises of all sorts, Joel was looked to as leader and administrator, even when a young man still in his twenties. The very year he took over the farm of his father (who had passed away two years previously), Joel was involved in an ill-fated salt-well drilling project. The following excerpt, taken from the Somerset and Bedford County History, is an interesting one:

"In April, 1839, a company was formed among farmers and others of Summit and Elklick townships for the purpose of drilling for salt water. From the old books, shown the writer by the late Ephraim Miller, there appears to have been $2,150 worth of stock subscribed. Joel B. Miller of Elklick Township was president of the company.

"A well was drilled in the bottom land of Elk Lick Run to a depth of nearly 700 feet, but proved a failure so far as obtaining salt water was concerned. There is a flow of water from the well that, so far as our information goes, has continued to flow ever since. The water is impregnated with minerals of some sort, and is not fit for domestic use. It is not known that any analysis was ever made to determine its properties. This well may be said to have been the cause of great loss to a number of persons long years after it was first drilled."

How early Joel knew of the coal underlying his farm is not certain, but we know he was mining it in the 1850's. According to a yellowed note examined by the writer, Jacob Keim and also "Noa" Beachy dug coal for Joel as early as 1853. They hauled coal "to room, to old house, to blacksmith shop, to sugar camp." His advice was much sought by others of the area when prospecting for coal, for it seems he was known far and wide for his acumen in the field of geology.

Our ancestor's interest in this science also led him to prospect for oil, and he actually headed up the "Grantsville Oil Company," according to some early letters. One such letter, dated December 5, 1866, written by Joseph M. Johnson of New Salem, Fayette County, Pennsylvania, asks Joel's opinion about boring deeper, because he feels himself "under obligation to the Grantsville Oil Company in regard to boring the well farther." He adds that he is more anxious since he struck sand rocks, and asks Joel to call a meeting of the company and "get their expression." The location of this boring is about where the present U.S. Route 40 passes through Shade Run Valley just west of Grantsville.

The Second Geological Survey of Pennsylvania also makes reference to oil well drilling in the Lower Productive Coals in the Salisbury Basin, and states that "the accuracy of the copy of the record is guaranteed by Joel Miller, Esq., President of the Company." Following this statement is the oil well record itself, with recordings to a depth of 678 feet, including coals, slates, iron ores, sandstones, and soapstones in varying depths and positions.

In 1871 Joel was still active in geological enterprises, as a letter from Michael Hay of Elklick,* Pennsylvania, dated March 9 of that year, states that the former had subscribed 10 shares of stock to the Elklick Cove Lumber and Iron Company. Hay agrees to pay five shares "in consideration of aid given in delivering diary of boring of the oil well west of Grantsville."

Not only did the people of the Springs-Grantsville-Salisbury community lean on Joel for help and advice in legal matters, but letters came in from other states pertaining to problems that needed his assistance. In 1856 he had dealings with an orphan's court concerning the administration of the estate of Philip Turney. Numerous letters from Isaac Hostetler of Shanesville, Tuscarawas County, Ohio, were sent to Joel from time to time, asking for help in negotiating a difficulty in relation to the settling of the estate.

In matters of folk medicine and healing with herbs and simples, Joel was apparently looked to for help and advice. A perusal of his old account books reveals some rather remarkable cures which today would seem ludicrous. They do, however, give evidence of a very active mind and a keen interest in the physical welfare of his contemporaries. So far did he carry this concern that he apparently brought into the community a man who allegedly could cure cancer. The details of this enterprise are not known to the writer.

In matters pertaining to education, Joel was definitely a leader in the community. The writer remembers reading a statement to the effect that our farsighted ancestor was a member (perhaps even chairman) of the Elk Lick Township School Board, but at the present time she is unable to substantiate this with records. The story related under "Esteem of Contemporaries" (see below) gives evidence that he was a man to be reckoned with when teachers were to be hired, and would give some indication of the verity of the above statement.

That he, like his father before him, was deeply interested in education for the people of his community is most apparent in some facts gleaned from his earliest account book in which the following statement is most revealing "To scoring schoolhouse logs—six days at .45 pr.—$2.70." This appears under the account with John Folk, who was doubtless the young man who had fled to Benedict's on the night of New Year's Eve, 1836, rescuing his baby sister from the flames of his log cabin home.

Joel was apparently responsible for the building of the school, and doubtless furnished the logs himself. The entry mentioned above was made on June 29, 1844, which corresponds with the date mentioned by Welfley in his Somerset County History as the time of the building of the second school building in Springs. Whereas the old (and apparently outgrown) log school building, built by his father, Benedict, stood in front of Elmer Bittinger's garage at the foot of the road which leads to Upper Springs (see "Father Benedict"), this new structure of Joel's was built at a point which today is practically the center of the Springs crossroads. According to the late Mrs. Henry Bittinger, who remembered both buildings, there was just enough space between the two to allow a four-horse load of hay to pass between them. This apparently was quite a feat and left a lasting impression on the observer. For the sake of those citizens of the Springs area who remember the large flat rock in the middle of the old road, with rails around it and a telephone pole in the center, one might add that both school buildings stood to the left of this rock (if one were facing the village proper and Meadow Mountain in the distance).

The comments pertaining to our ancestor, made by the late P. L. Livengood in an issue of the Meyersdale Republican, dated 1925, may be of interest to the reader of this brief character sketch. ". . . the late Joel Miller, a patriarchal-looking man with a long white beard. He was a fine conversationalist, a man of polished manners, natural mechanical ability, and a good geologist. He was also somewhat of an astronomer."

Esteem of Contemporaries

The esteem of Joel's contemporaries for his personal qualities is reflected in several interesting stories told by his grandson, the late Will (William) Miller of Sugarcreek, Ohio. Will said his grandfather was a very smart man, "ein unvergleichlicher gescheiter Mann." Of Will himself it was once said (when he had performed a clever feat as a boy), "Now who would have thought of that but one of Joel Miller's grandsons?"

Some measure of the esteem in which Joel was held by the children of his day is reflected in the story of his grandson, the late Gideon D. Miller. The small boy fell and struck his head hard enough to acquire a bump on the forehead. He rejoiced greatly because now he would resemble his revered grandsire who had a similar protruberance!

Another evidence of esteem is the fact that his name was frequently in the lot when ministers were chosen for the Amish Church of which he was a faithful member. He spoke of this with some little amusement, as he never felt led to serve as minister, though his father and grandfather had thus served before him. Evidence seems to indicate that he believed his best service consisted in serving as community leader, adviser, and counselor, as well as producer of the many pieces of equipment needed to run the pioneer household.

In the field of education he was highly respected. A little story may serve to illustrate why this was true. An applicant for a teaching position once came to Joel as to a leading citizen with authority. Joel asked, "Do you know enough to teach school?" The applicant replied that he knew Copp's by heart ("Ich weiss ganz Copp's ausvendich"), referring to Copp's Arithmetic. Joel's reply was that he also knew it "ausvendich" but not "innavendich." This is a German play on words (not translatable) and implies that he knew the outside of the Arithmetic but not the inside! His grandson, who related the story, was of the opinion that he passed the applicant.

Summarizing some of his activities, the same grandson* once wrote in an article, "He was a farmer, fruit grower, woodworker, blacksmith, mechanic, geologist." One might also add "educator, administrator, and community lawyer."

* Jonas B. Miller

Craftsmanship

Research indicates that the craftsmanship of our ancestor was unexcelled in the area at the time (except perhaps by his own sons), be the work in wood or metal. The earlier of the two Joel B. Miller account books that have been perserved is one bought and dated May "2th," 1838, approximately one year after his father's death. It would appear that he not only took over his father's shops, but doubtless built larger and more complete woodworking and blacksmith shops. The late W. S. Livengood, who as a boy well knew these shops, said that Joel ran a "regular factory." He remembered vividly two huge doors that dragged and an enormous fireplace in one of the shops. Wolf and bear traps (now in the Springs Museum) came from the old blacksmith shop, as did large augers for boring wooden pipes. He invented a small drill that could be carried on the shoulder, fastened to the limb of a tree, and used in prospecting for coal. Also produced in his shops were all sorts of nuts and bolts, sugar augers, and sugar pans. He taught his sons to temper steel and make springs, and they in turn taught their own sons (as related by grandson Edward D. Miller).

During his active life, Joel made almost every conceivable piece of equipment needed on the farm or in the home. His account books are full of references to everything from cradles to coffins, with many spinning wheels (wool and flax) always in the making. Many rope beds, chairs (rocking and straight-back), and tables were turned out with speed and artistry. For the farmer he made grain cradles, scythes, peck and ½ bushel measures, hand wagons, and many similar items.

W. S. Livengood, whose father Sam was at the time renting from Joel, remembered that the latter came with his sons in 1867 and rebuilt the sugar camp on Cornucopia Farm (the camp having burned to the ground not long previously). Joel and his sons made the sugar pans and did all the carpenter work, while Harrison Fuller built the furnace of stone and brick. At that time most of the sugar keelers on the place were troughs hollowed out of logs, but Sam Livengood also had some more modern stave-and-hoop sap buckets made in a nearby cooper's shop. Professor A. J. Miller remembers that there were such keelers on the farm when it was in the hands of his father, Joel J. Miller.

The greatest compliment on Joel's workmanship to come to the attention of the writer is the following (source unknown). "He was the only man anywhere around who could make wooden legs that would not hurt the wearer. People would come for considerable distances and wait long and patiently while he worked them out by hand."

The account books of our patriarch ancestor are replete with fascinating facts and figures. Only a few samples can be cited here:

1839-40: Worked 7 days in December-January on 16 spinning wheels. (These he sold for $4.50 each.)

1846: Sold three bedsteads and cords for $3.00 each, and a chest for $3.00. (Bedstead and chest from his own shop.)

1849: Made and sold a small coffin for $1.87.

1850: Was boring and laying 22 feet of wooden pipe November 15—digging coal at this time also.

1853: Notation in account book: "Fosforas to make matches; fosforas is kept in water to prevent fire."

Not only did Joel make all manner of wood and metal equipment, but he also mended and repaired what was brought to his shops from a wide geographic area. In fact, in the later years of his life much of his time was taken up with this activity, and his sons more and more took over the making of furniture for the countryfolk and townsfolk. He "mended" lanterns, halter chains, churns, pitchforks, ladders, sleds, and windmills; "fixed" grindstones, hames, door hinges, and clocks; "dressed" saws, mattocks, and shovels—to mention a few activities.

Land Ownership

In addition to his father's homestead near the present village of Springs (now Amos J. Yoder farm), Joel also owned several tracts in Maryland (see "Early Land Holdings"), and probably some mountain land in Pennsylvania. He had numerous renters from time to time, but many of his transactions are no longer on record in the community. Jonas Maust rented from Joel in 1845, but died that year, and his widow, Catherine, moved away. In 1849 Samuel Miller evidently was a tenant. Joel's account book records, "House rent paid in making the garden at that place for first year." In 1858, an old yellowed note declared, there was an agreement between Joel and Rube Folk, a tenant. The document is written in a very scientific and elaborate manner and gives evidence of his superior training in the legal phraseology of his day. In 1862 he gave notice to Isaac Mett, tenant, that he should "quit" the premises by the next January. Where this tenant lived is not evident in the note.

In 1866 Joel bought the Solomon Sterner Farm (later known as "Miller's Addition to Grantsville") from the court trustees for $8,625. This consisted of the old Drover's Inn (now Casselman Hotel) and some 300 acres of land lying north of Grantsville. This was a part of the original "Cornucopia" tract of extensive acreage. The inn was built around 1824 by Daniel Grant, an English engineer, on land which was then vacant and adjoined the land of Jesse Tomlinson to the east. Sterner purchased the land in 1833, and it was in turn sold to our ancestor, Joel B. Miller, in 1866.

In April, 1867, the Sam Livengood family (father of the late Editor W. S. Livengood) moved into the old Drover's Inn on Miller's Addition. Livengood farmed the place on shares, and the owner, Joel B., received one third of the produce and crops. Once when dividing winter apples with small Billy and Nancy Livengood, Joel said, "Here is a parcel of very nice spice apples; two for you, and one for me." As W. S. Livengood remembered, he spoke clearly and precisely, without accent.

In later years Joel B.'s son, Joel J., rented the farm from his father. The second son of the latter, Jonas B., was born here December 10, 1870. The family of Joel J. remained here until a home could be built on part of old Cornucopia Farm north of Grantsville, on the site of the present Alvin H. Yoder farm.

In addition to the Sterner Farm, Joel B. apparently bought a tract of land, costing $500.00, from George Charles. Since the 300-acre Sterner Farm cost only $625.00, the writer concludes that the Charles property was not much less in area. In Joel's last account book an old yellowed note read, "There has been survaid off from the Charls and Cornucopia three corses of lotts, streets and alleys, by the said Joel Miller, Sr." Thus it appears that the rumor that he sold lots in Grantsville is quite well founded.

Reading between the lines among old papers, the writer concludes that Joel B. bought in the Bittinger area an 800-acre tract named "Hard Struggle." That he sold 364 acres of this to the Beitzel brothers is clear from a perusal of these papers. A note dated 1872 mentions that "the tax in Mariland is one dollar to the $100.00 . Henrey Beitzel's land, 150 acres, $3.00 pr. acre, valuation $450.00. His tax would be $4.50. Ludvich Beitzel's land, 214 acres . . . tax would be $6.42, which I have still paid all along and they owe it to me." Evidently he is still befriending the immigrants he had taken in on their arrival in America.

The story was told by the late J. B. Miller concerning the replacing of the old stone marker separating the land tracts of two pioneer settlers in the Grantsville area—Jesse Tomlinson and Daniel Grant. The initials of these men were carved on the two sides of the stone which in the late 1800's marked the boundary line between what was then the Joel J. Miller farm and the Urias Stanton farm. A huge white oak tree had been felled by mistake to make molasses barrels in a nearby cooper's shop, and the famous stone had fallen to the ground. On the occasion of the replacing of the stone, the following were present: Joel J. Miller and Urias Stanton (who did the planting), as well as several sons of Joel J. (Jonas B. and Alvin J.), their cousin, Jacob S. Miller, and a neighbor, John Wegman. This stone is located near the home of the late Floyd J. Miller, on the old Cornucopia tract.

The Homestead Near Springs

The farm and homestead* which Joel bought from the heirs of his father, Benedict, was an extensive one, all of both Upper and Lower Springs being included in the Miller acreage during the period when the children were growing up (although this was only a portion of what his grandfather Peter Beachy once owned). With such a large farm, the Miller children had to walk long distances to bring home the cows at milking time.

In spite of the size of his farm, Joel B. Miller was not a farmer at heart. He did not like to have his land plowed, and much of it was in "white-top" and other native grasses. The farm did, however, contain one or more large apple orchards which were said to have been unexcelled in the area. J. B. Miller once said it was the greatest place for fruit he ever saw—with apples, peaches, plums, and other fruit trees covering the rolling hills. He was of the opinion that Joel's wife, Catherine, supervised their planting and care, while her husband and sons were busy in the carpenter and blacksmith shops on the place.

Although the writer has not been able to learn where all of Joel's shops stood during their years of operation, rumor and evidence seem to indicate that a large carpenter (woodworking) shop stood where Amos Yoder's garden is currently located. Very little information is actually available concerning the construction of buildings on the homestead during Joel's lifetime, but the large old farmhouse is said to have been torn down by Joel's son-in-law, John (Hans) Yoder, about 1890, and the present large house built on the old foundation. This would have occurred some five years after Joel's death.

Joel's Wife Catherine, Grandmother of Our Clan

When Joel was approximately 22 years of age (1833), he married Catherine Brenneman, an immigrant from Hofgut (estate) Braunshardt near Hesse Darmstadt, south of Frankfurt, Germany. Catherine was born April 6, 1813, and came to America in 1825 at the age of 12. The family evidently settled for a time in the Berlin Glades area of Somerset County, for the youngest daughter, Barbara, was born there in 1827. Some time after this they apparently settled in the Springs-Grantsville area, and may have had connections with the Millers, though this is not clear because of lack of records.

From all evidence, Catherine was a creative, poetic soul who taught her children German rhymes and folk songs which are handed down to this day. Her capabilities about the homestead were many and varied. According to her grandson, J. B. Miller, she was the horticulturist of the family, and apparently taught some of her daughters to do grafting and pruning of trees. Her daughters, Elizabeth (wife of Elias Hershberger), and Catherine (wife of Elias M. Miller), were apparently the most adept along this line.

Catherine's kindness and motherliness became known throughout the neighborhood, to the extent that they were practically a legend to the lonely immigrants of the day. A neighbor, the late Susan Bittinger, once said, "Catherine was the kindest and finest woman I ever knew." A granddaughter, Miss Annie L. Miller, often tells how Grandmother Miller reproved her daughters kindly and gently with the words, "Girls, that is not nice!" Crist Guingerich, the German immigrant befriended by Catherine and Joel, said of her, "She always treated me like a son." When Louis (Ludwig) Beitzel came to America to join his brother at Joel's, Catherine (having never seen him before but recognizing him because of family resemblance) said with a world of welcome in her kind voice, "Ah, here comes Ludwig!" From that moment he felt at ease, and his pangs of homesickness left him.

There is evidence that Catherine was a good thinker and a keen observer. She is pictured as a woman who was very much against superstition. She taught her daughters industry and thrift and taught them how to practice the arts and crafts so important to the maintenance of a pioneer home. They learned how to spin and weave wool; raise, process, and weave flax; and produce table and bed linens as well as clothing. That she was comely is indicated by a statement made earlier in this article—the fact that she and Joel were said to have been one of the handsomest couples in the Amish Church during their time. J. B. Miller's testimony concerning his grandmother was as follows: "She was a womanly, worthy, motherly, exceptionally intelligent homemaker, even for the lonely immigrant."

Catherine died in the prime of life, at the age of 57, and her passing was grieved bitterly indeed, especially by her four daughters, and most of all by Catherine (age 22) and Ann (age 12) who were still at home. A grandson (Ulyssus, son of Dan) remembered hearing his aunts weep uncontrollably as they followed the rough casket across the long house porch. Appendicitis (then known as "inflammation of the bowel") is said to have been the cause of her death. Her son, Daniel, designed her tombstone, and Henry Christner is said to have carved out the first one. According to Daniel's son, Edward, the final set was carved out by Daniel himself in later years. In the words of Edward, "I saw my father (Daniel) make the tombstones for his father and mother. He chiseled out the letters himself. He made them in the old cider mill (now Norman Bender farm)." Catherine died February 18, 1870, according to the old Sam Folk diary preserved for posterity by his descendants.

Since Catherine's descendants may be interested in learning of her family connections and her ancestry, a family record is included below.

Ancestry of Catherine Brenneman

Nicholas Brenneman, born 1736 and died May 7, 1789. He lived on Hofgut (estate) Braunshardt by Darmstadt, Germany.

Married (1) Dec., 1756, to Barbara Kurtz who died 1770.

Married (2) Feb., 1771, to Mathalena Untzinger.

Children by second marriage: Jacobina, Samuel, Jacob, Jacob, Johannes Daniel, Christian, Barbara, Elisabethe, Peter, Veltin, Katherine.

Daniel Brenneman married Marie Bender in Germany and all children but Barbara (born in Berlin, Pa., area) were born in Germany. The old Brenneman Bible of the Grantsville area states that Barbara was born in David Lehman's house "in der klatz (Glades) bei Berlin." Children of Daniel Brenneman and Martha Bender, record taken from sheet written by S. J. Miller, and also from Brenneman Book:

Jacob, b. July 23, 1805, and d. Dec. 16, 1806.

Jacob, b. Dec. 28, 1806.

Mary, b. Mar. 19, 1809.

Anna, b. July 27, 1811, and m. Daniel Yutzy (first wife).

Catherine, b. Apr. 6, 1813, and m. Joel B. Miller. (She died Feb. 18, 1870, according to Sam Folk diary.)

John, b. May 22, 1815, and d. July 12, 1816.

Elizabeth, b. Nov. 15, 1816, at Meischeidt, m. Thomas Lee.

Lehnge, b. Apr. 21, 1819, second wife of Daniel Youtzy.

Christian, b. June 24, 1821, went to Smithville, Ohio. (Note: His nephew, Christian J. Miller, also moved to Smithville, Ohio, about 1881.)

Daniel D., b. July 8, 1824, m. Susan Beachy (daughter of Bishop Jonas Beachy, OLM.).

Barbara, b. Apr. 5, 1827, near Berlin, Pa., and m. Joe Swartzencruber and moved to Iowa.

The family came to America in 1825.

Joel's Family

According to varied evidence Joel was a member of an exceptionally intelligent family. One choice preserved letter from his younger brother, Moses B. Miller of Geistown near Johnstown, dated March 16, 1868, gives evidence of this quality. The letter is written in English and includes a description of an ice jam which caused much havoc. "The ice was deposited among the houses and along the banks and in the lots and gardens, which makes it look desolate." The handwriting is very fine, particularly when one considers that few of his fellows of German descent were capable of using the language to any degree. Moses adds that it would cost about $5,000 to rebuild the bridge that was swept away.

When Joel was approximately 26 years of age, his father, Benedict, passed away in the prime of life (aged 56), leaving Joel, who was the oldest son then at home, in charge of his own household and that of his widowed stepmother. Joel himself had two sons, Samuel and Daniel, at this time, and a number of brothers and sisters still at home. He thus became the guardian of his minor brothers, Moses and Jacob, while Jeremiah Miller (identity unknown) became the guardian of his half sisters Lydia and Magdalena.

Through conferences with many descendants, some of the details of Joel's family life have come to light. When his daughter Elizabeth (later Mrs. Elias Hershberger) was a little girl (born 1841), there was still enough connection between Joel and his brothers and sisters, who had recently settled in pioneer Iowa territory, so that the little girl frequently received gifts from them. As time went on these ties were gradually severed and there was little correspondence between the two states.

His son Daniel, who was married in 1861, lived in his father's old log "still house" for a time.

Daniel's oldest son Gideon was born in this house in 1862. His daughter Mary was married to Emanuel Hershberger in 1864, and this young couple also apparently lived in the "still house" for a time, as their oldest children (Noah, born in March, 1865; and Lydia, born in October, 1866) first saw the light of day in this structure. The old building apparently served as a "weaning" house for newlywed daughters until they became accustomed to the idea of being away from their parents. His son Joel J. also lived on the old homestead the first year of his married life and his oldest child, Malinda, was presumably born there in October, 1867.

Joel B.'s children were apt in many ways, having inherited these qualities from both parents. Mrs. John Klotz (daughter of Henry Beitzel) once said, "Whatever any one of the Miller boys made, the others wanted to make one like it; and so did my father, who worked in the shop with them." The daughters, too, were apt with their hands.

Of all Joel B.'s sons, Daniel and Elias inherited in largest measure the craftsmanship in wood and metal for which their father was so noted. Joel J., the farmer son, also was handy with tools and produced such practical articles as wool carders, table model reels, etc. The handiwork of father Joel B. and these three sons are well represented in the Springs Museum through the useful household items they produced in their shops. Both Daniel and Elias made exceptionally fine furniture on their stone wheel turning lathes. The youngest son, Christian, at one time helped his brother Eli in his planing mill on the Casselman River in Shade Hollow. He later moved to Ohio where he had his own planing mill and apple-butter factory.

Joel's oldest son, Samuel (commonly known as "Posey Sam" among his contemporaries), was an artist with pen and ink, a landscape gardener, a horticulturist, and an animal fancier. For his beautiful handwriting (see photostatic copy of school record, p. 72) and his exquisite pen drawings of birds in colored ink, Sam used a fresh Spencerian pen point each day, so exact was this craftsman. Near his desk hung a cage with canaries, and creeping about the house was a rare variety of cat whose Latin name was known to its master. The spacious Miller lawn, landscaped with almost every conceivable type of evergreen, was stocked with swans, peacock, and deer, and in his stalls stood some of the finest Hambletonian mares of the entire area. All five of Sam's children inherited his outstanding love of nature, and his horticultural tendencies were strongly reproduced in his sons Jacob and Eli.

Of all of Joel B.'s sons, the craftsmanship of Daniel (Dan to his neighbors) was perhaps the most prolific and varied. According to many interviews held with his sons over a period of years, Dan had a turning lathe on which he made reels, spinning wheels, beds, tables, chairs, rockers, cradles, and bureaus or chests of drawers. He invented and produced the very successful Kooser washing machine and paid for the patent. He worked in both wood and metal and made axes, mattocks, broadaxes, sugar pans (for maple camps), wagons, and washboards, as well as his own cider mill and press. He also made grain cradles, dressing the fingers by hand in an expert manner, even near the end of his life.

All of Dan's sons inherited talent in mechanics—especially Gideon, Milton, Edward, and Clarence. William (Will) developed some talent later in life, while Ulysses (Uli) possessed some also, but never applied it seriously, as he preferred to accent his musical tendencies. Milt invented and manufactured the first self-propelled car in the entire area (see p. 75), while Gideon produced a number of outstanding inventions. Gid built a steam-powered engine while still at home on the farm. Later he built sawmill engines for the Kings, the Opels, the Brennemans, and the Folks, and began the manufacture of sugar pans for boiling down maple sap. Soon after the turn of the century he began making Twentieth-Century Steam Engines, and later (after gasoline replaced steam) invented an auger-type coal-cutting machine, which to this day is the major part of the production of Miller Machine Works, now operated by his son Aaron. Symbolic of the Miller mind is the story of Gid who as a boy used to sit on the cellar steps and meditate how he could operate a churn without turning it himself! That such meditation bore fruit is evident from the list of inventions named above.

Joel's daughters, too, were blessed with exceptional talents and abilities. Of the four, the writer has been able to glean most information concerning Catherine, wife of Elias M. Miller (see p. 76). Catherine was very alert mentally, a woman of imagination and ingenuity, of wide and varied interests. She was a great nature lover and owned and used Chapman's Bird Book, built shelves on the cellar porch for nesting wrens, and fed the birds in winter. She carried flagstones in her apron to make walks through the lawn, planted trees and flowers about the grounds, poked peach seeds into the soil here and there about the farm. She constructed and landscaped a rock garden, tied two hemlock trees together to make an arch in the front lawn, and altogether spent much time in the fields and yard. While on her frequent walks, she picked up many Indian arrowheads for a collection she had made over the years.

That Catherine was also inventive is evidenced by a number of facts. One day she said to her husband, "Let's build the new house lower than the spring, so that we can have running water. So they constructed four successive troughs: one hung from the ceiling, one in the pantry, one in the cellar, and one in the barn—all flowing from Saddler Spring. Catherine also built her own shelves in the house, and soldered handles on tin cans to use around the kitchen. On the artistic side, she had a yen for folklore and sang folk songs for her children, both German Lieder and English ditties, including "The Nut-Brown Maid." A sad poem brought by her mother from the Hesse Darmstadt region of Germany, and often chanted by both her father and her mother, is one about the swallows who returned home to find their larder empty.

How much a daughter of Joel B. Miller could do with little education is evidenced by Ann, the youngest, who attended school only a week or less in her lifetime. She was evidently trained by her parents, for she often visited schools in the area and spelled down entire classes in spelling contests. She also loved to write and was a regular correspondent for the Sugarcreek (Ohio) Budget for a time. She seldom figured out mathematical problems on paper, but reckoned them in her head. She was very well versed in Old Testament history and taught her children much along this line, telling the Bible stories in German.

There is evidence that Elizabeth and Mary were also exceptional women, but the writer has been unable to obtain much information concerning their character traits. The late Harvey Hershberger (son of Elizabeth Miller and Elias Hershberger) once said that his mother "could do a lot of things most women could not do."

Mary's children spoke with feeling of the pious life their mother lived, and of her Bible reading and teaching, a testimony which is strongly echoed by the children of Elizabeth, Catherine, and Ann.

In spiritual matters, the descendants of Joel B. made a definite impact. A son, Joel J., served as bishop of the Amish Mennonite Church for years, and a grandson, Jacob S. Miller (Fam. 2), assisted Joel J. as contemporary minister (prediger) in the brotherhood. (See "Early Amish Church" below.) Both of these men were patriarchal characters, whose greatest contribution was in the realm of the spirit and in human relations rather than in the production of handicrafts.

Joel's Last Days

Our ancestor's last days were useful ones, if one may judge from his account books, which show activity almost to the end of his life in the fall of 1885. From some old papers it is apparent, however, that he began to prepare for the next generation as early as 1868. A note from Jacob Brown of Cumberland (attorney?) states, "You can make a deed yourself to your son." Whether this refers to the Sterner Farm (Cornucopia near Grantsville) is not clear, but all evidence points to this. The "good stone wall" which Samuel Dively of Berlin promised to lay early in this same year is evidently the wall of the barn or house of Joel J. Miller's new farm acquired from his father, who apparently made all negotiations. (During this time Grantsville had mud streets and cobbler Hans Smith lived across the road from the old drover's inn where young Joel lived at the time.)

When Joel's youngest daughter, Ann (Anna), was married to (John) Hans Yoder in 1877, Joel himself (with his second wife, Elizabeth Yoder, a sister to Bishop Mike Yoder of McVeytown, Mifflin County, Pennsylvania) moved into the old "still house" for a time. During this time our ancestor was still active in a number of large-scale operations. An old paper, dated April 22 of this year, appears to be a promissory note for the payment of a fee connected with Joel's agency for "two hundred seventy-five dollars worth of seeding machines." The note comes from "Terahat" (apparently Terre Haute), Indiana, and is signed by John Fry, agent for Fred Jones. At this time Joel was also renting property in Maryland, as evidenced by a note dated 1879, stating that A. G. Keim paid him $12.52 in rent for the Sterner property.

It was during this same year (1879) that Joel built for himself and his wife a small frame house on the slope above the larger house, at that time occupied by his son-in-law, John Yoder, and daughter, Ann. According to our ancestor's own account book, he "moofed in the new house July 28, 1879." This was apparently a retirement or gross-Daudi house which he was able to live in only about six years before his death in 1885. The elderly couple apparently moved into the new house from the "still house," since Ann's oldest child was born the year the new grandfather house was built. The little house in question, with its winding stairway and hand-worked trim, is still standing back of the Amos J. Yoder home.

In the last years of his life Joel B. apparently had a sawmill in the "Forks" (the Bittinger area, near the forking of the Casselman River) in Garrett County. From old notes it appears that Jack Fazenbaker did his sawing. He was also active in his shops, mostly doing repair work, until near the end. In an account with John Folk in 1883, the following items are mentioned: "to dressing matict; to dressing a set of blasting tools and three drills; to fixing bell." The stroke which he is said to have suffered in his last days apparently did not greatly hinder his activities.

That Joel was a good businessman and well able to manage his financial affairs throughout his life is evident upon perusal of his last account book. Here is recorded a breakdown of the inheritance of his nine living sons and daughters, each of whom received approximately $3,000 from the estate of their father. This would total $27,000 over and above expenses incurred in the settling of the estate.

From numerous conversations with persons who remembered our worthy sire, it would appear that he continued to lead singing in church services until very near the end, sitting by the table at the front of the church and inspiring the congregation with his deep, ringing voice. The last song he led was the Eighty-sixth Psalm set to music. Several persons still living remember this occasion with great clarity. His funeral sermon was preached in his own barn, probably because of the large crowds attending the last rites of this father, patriarch, and community leader—our beloved grandparent.

Miller Characteristics

From considerable research done both in Europe and America, the writer has drawn some rather definite conclusions as to what a "typical" Miller personality might be. Physically the Millers tend to be of medium build, though some (as Simon S. and Jacob S.) were of imposing stature. Blue or hazel eyes seems to be the general rule. High foreheads and long rather than round faces are found often among the clan.

In reference to mental qualities, it was often said by the scores of persons interviewed over the years that Millers in general (referring to the Joel B. line) have exceptionally intelligent, creative minds and "know how to figure their way out of difficult situations." A very discerning descendant speaks of the clan as "artistic, mechanical, mathematical, creative, exact, individualistic, and generally even-tempered." He also adds that they are "perfectionists" and speaks of their painstaking craftsmanship. One might add on the other side of the ledger a tendency to procrastinate and to take life a bit easy; but these tendencies have been somewhat overcome by frequent intermarriage with such energetic lines as the pioneer Beachy clan of the area.

In matters of education the Millers have always been in the forefront. They hankered after higher learning long before this became popular (or even accepted) in their churches and communities. The first three members of the Conservative Amish Mennonite (now Conservative Mennonite) Church to attend college were descendants of Joel B., as were the first in the Springs area to obtain doctor's degrees (philosophy or medicine). Goshen College at one time had three Ph.D. descendants of Benedict Miller on the faculty. One young Miller hopeful of the Springs-Grantsville area who had acquired a Yale University catalog and was poring over it longingly, wept his grief when his preacher father told his son that he (the father) would be too severely criticized for letting his son attend a university.

The verdict in Holmes County, Ohio, as here in the Alleghenies, is that the Millers are "strong to help people." This is substantiated by the stories of the benevolences of Benedict and Joel B., and was strongly depicted in Joel's grandson, Jacob S. One might add that "Posey Sam" planted apple trees along the highway for wayfarers, while his son, Jacob, both planted and grafted trees that overhung the public road so that travelers could enjoy them. Joel B. had a brother, Moses, who was known throughout the Johnstown area for his kind treatment of strangers. In cases of illness in the community, Simon S. (brother of Jacob) was almost invariably found at the bedside of the sufferer. It is noteworthy that nine of the fifteen-man Board of Directors of Penn Alps Corporation, a Christian organization with a strong motive of benevolence and "human conservation," are direct descendants of Joel B. Miller.

A fascinating fact and one worthy of note is that the writer found the characteristics of the Amish descendants of Müllers in Europe to be almost identical with those of the Millers of America, especially noteworthy being their artistic and creative tendencies, their exactness, and their capacity for taking pains in creative pursuits.

It would be only fair to mention, in closing this section, that there are many descendants of Joel B. Miller living today who give expression to creative personalities by hand-crafting items of distinction and beauty. Among these expressions are paintings in oil and water color, sculpture in stone, wood-turning and wood-carving, needlework and basketry, to mention a few. The Miller section of the Springs Museum has made a modest beginning in assembling these articles for the enjoyment of posterity, and a number of the craftsmen who produce articles for sale at Penn Alps, Inc., Grantsville, Maryland, are descendants of Joel B. Miller.

The Early Amish Church

"Like the Tunkers and Mennonites, the Amish were among the pioneer settlers of the county. They have always been most numerous in Elk Lick and Conemaugh townships, although there is a sprinkling in Brothers Valley and Stony, and some other townships. They have adhered more closely to their ancient customs and garb than either of the two other denominations.

"There are no church records, but according to the traditions, Rev. Christian Yoder of Stony Creek was the first resident bishop. In Elk Lick Township, Peter Livengood was of the Amish church, and is said to have beeen a preacher, but it is also said that later on he became a Tunker. His son, Christian, was a strict member of the church, but so far as we know he was not a minister. Jacob Miller, who lived on the upper waters of Tub Mill Run, was a minister of the church. He came from Berks County prior to 1787. His son, Benedict Miller, born in 1781, was also a minister. He was called to the ministry in 1809 and ordained as bishop of the church in 1813.

"His co-ministers were Peter Miller and Yost Yoder. Rev. Jonas Beachy succeeded Miller as bishop. The time of his calling is not known, but Joel Beachy, his nephew, became a bishop of the church in 1853. Both have long since passed to their reward. Moses B. Miller, a son of Bishop Benedict Miller, born in 1820, was also an Amish preacher, but removed to Cambria County. He, however, frequently preached in the county. Daniel Hershberger, and later Manasses J. Beachy, were also among the Elk Lick preachers. Jacob Stutzman, of Stony Creek, father of the "Grammer King," whose ministry must have dated as far back as 1785, also preached for the Elk Lick Amish.

"These old preachers were not a paid ministry. It was a matter of duty with them. They were mostly farmers, who, on being called to the service of the church, answered to the call as best they could, and no doubt often to their great inconvenience and temporal loss. It meant long rides on horseback and in all kinds of weather. Then, the preaching was always in German and at the houses of the members. A meal was always served by the owner of the house before the people went home. Oftentimes several hundred people were present, all of whom were welcome to come to the tables, whether members of the church or not. It is easy to see that to have preaching at one's home was quite a tax on the resources of such as were so honored. But all this was in accordance with their notions of hospitality, and it was cheerfully borne.

"In Elk Lick this is somewhat changed now, for about 1881 they built themselves a church, near the crossroad schoolhouse, in which their worship is held. In Conemaugh Township a church was built in 1875, largely through the influence of the late Isaac Kauffman, who was a member of the denomination."*

According to reliable sources, four church buildings were constructed in 1881 by the Amish Mennonite congregations in the Casselman Valley. These were located at Mechanicsburg (now Summit Mills) and at Niverton (near Springs), Pennsylvania, and near Grantsville (Maple Glen) and Bittinger (Glade) in Garrett County, Maryland.

At the time these churches were built, the original Amish Mennonite Church, as it was introduced from Switzerland, Alsace, and the Palatinate, was still intact as one body. Over the years some basic differences in belief and practice appeared among the leaders of the church, resulting in a division in the summer of 1895. The bishop of the original church, Joel J. Miller (Fam. 312), led the progressive side, with Jacob S. Miller (Fam. 3) as co-minister. Jonas B. Miller (Fam. 313) was ordained to the ministry two years later, in 1897. (Today Ivan J. Miller, son of Jonas, serves as bishop of the same brotherhood.)

The progressive church was known as the Miller Church until a district conference was formed with other churches. After this it

* Taken from Welfley's History of Somerset County

Note: The above Jacob Miller, DBH-3312, was Joel B. Miller's grandfather, and a son of John Miller, our first known ancestor who came to America prior to 1757. Benedict Miller, DBH-3450, was Joel B. Miller's father (Fam. 1). Moses B. Miller, DBH-4361, was a son of Benedict—Joel B.'s youngest brother.

was known as the Conservative Amish Mennonite Church, and more recently as the Conservative Mennonite Church. When the brotherhood was divided into two groups, the church houses were also divided between the two new congregations. The Old Order Amish Church has the houses at Summit Mills and Niverton, and the Conservative Mennonite Church has the houses at Grantsville and Bittinger, with a third one added after the turn of the century (near St. Paul, Pennsylvania).

The meetinghouse near Grantsville (Maple Glen) was replaced by a larger one in 1948. The last service in the old building was held on the evening of Ascension Day, May 30, 1946. On the following day dismantling of the old church was started, and the new church was built and the first service held in this structure on May 16, 1948.

The Miller Reunion and the Springs Historical Society

The first Miller reunion was held Saturday, September 25, 1926, on the farm of Earl Folk (earlier known as the Jake Folk farm and today owned by Eli Summy) near Springs, Pennsylvania. This farm lies a few miles southwest of Springs, just across the Mason and Dixon Line in Maryland.

A few weeks prior to the above date some Millers of the Springs area (including Mintie Miller Stevanus, Gideon Miller, Dwight Miller, and others) discussed the desirability of holding a reunion of the descendants of Joel B. Miller. They called a meeting, and the following interim committee was appointed to serve: Milton B. Miller, chairman; Gideon Miller and Olen L. Miller.

The newly appointed committee met on September 13, 1926, and made arrangements to hold the first Miller reunion on September 25 of the same year, in the Daniel Brenneman sugar grove south of Springs. On the appointed morning there was a downpour of rain, and the committee was about to call off the festivities. Before this could be accomplished, however, Mrs. Earl Folk called and offered the use of the double barn floor on the Folk farm, which meant quick preparation to get the building in shape for the occasion. No sooner had a group of volunteers cleaned the threshing floor and grounds than the Millers began to arrive on the scene with the laden lunch baskets traditional in the area. The noon meal (served cafeteria style) was followed by a short program, after which Irwin Miller suggested that the reunion become an annual affair. To take care of the following year, the current interim committee was asked to serve until the fall of 1927.

A reunion of the descendants of Joel B. Miller has been held annually since the above date, with the exception of three years (1943-1945), which were omitted because of World War II with its attendant gasoline and food rationing. The scene of the reunion was formerly the Menno Hershberger maple grove, and more recently (since the cutting of this magnificent grove) the Daniel Brenneman grove. On two occasions, because of rain, the reunion was held in Rodamer's garage in Grantsville, Maryland. On two other occasions it was held in the former CCC Camp near West Salisbury, at the foot of Negro Mountain. Labor Day has been selected as the most suitable day for this festivity, since it is a holiday for the scores of Millers employed in public works, both locally and in other states.

Attendance at the Miller reunion held in 1926 was about 100. By 1929 the attendance had climbed to over 400, and in recent years it has gone well over 600.

Since the Millers have always been interested in history, the rule of the day is a general exodus from the reunion grounds to the Springs Museum near Niverton, following the afternoon program and a short visit with friends. So keen is this Miller interest in history that the Springs Historical Society, founded in the summer of 1957, owes much to the descendants of Joel B. Miller. Its first president was Olen L. Miller, compiler of this genealogy (Fam. 353), followed by Evan J. Miller (Fam. 318). The first vice-president and curator of the museum was the late Ernest Miller (Fam. 92), through whose kindness in making available his basement this facility became a reality. The writer (Fam. 28) has served as executive director of the society since its beginning and as curator of the museum since the untimely death of her cousin Ernest. The late Floyd J. Miller was voted in as historian of the society in the fall of 1957 and served in this capacity until his untimely death in 1960. The Springs Historical Society sincerely mourns the loss of both these important leaders in the community and in the society.

ILLUSTRATIONS

The photograph to the left is a likeness of John J. Miller, brother of our ancestor, Benedict Miller, of family DBH-3313. John was born in Berks County, Pennsylvania, April 19, 1778; moved to Somerset County in 1782; to Holmes County, Ohio, in 1811; and finally, around 1850, to Waupekong, Indiana, where he died at a ripe old age. He was the first person in his neighborhood to use an initial with his name, and thus acquired the nickname of Jay Miller. He was also the first person to build a mill in the region of Barrs Mills, Ohio, where he settled in 1816 (moving from Walnut Creek Township, where he had set foot in 1811).

This photograph of John J. is used because no photographs of our direct ancestors, Benedict and Joel B., are available anywhere; and also because it is probably one of the earliest photographs of its kind in existence. From available evidence, the writer believes it was taken in the 1850's. An air-brush reproduction is found in the Springs Museum, as is also a chair made by John in his old age.

It might be mentioned that it was the uncle of John J., a brother of his father Jacob, who moved to Holmes County in 1815. Confusion on this point has resulted from the fact that both Johns are from the Casselman Valley area in Pennsylvania-Maryland.

Deed to Old Beachy Estate

Above is the deed to "Barr Kelt," warranted March 10, 1785, and patented April 25, 1788, by Peter "Pidgey," ancestor of Benedict Miller's wife Catherine. The document states that the land is "situate in Brothers' Valley Township, Bedford County; adjoins land of Christian Most, some vacant land," and an "oak bush in the Maryland line"; and that it consists of 417 acres. The Honorable Peter Muhlenberg, Esq., Vice-president of the Supreme Executive Council of Pennsylvania implanted the seal on the document in 1788, twelve years after the founding of the Commonwealth. Our ancestor, Benedict Miller, acquired this land (or a portion thereof) from the ancestors of his wife, Catherine Beachy (Bitsche, Pidgey) on January 1, 1821 (see text p. 30).

It is the opinion of historians of the area that the "Bitsches" were squatters here long before the warrant was made, and probably even before the Treaty of Fort Stanwix opened this region to the white man. Since the Bitsches came to America from Switzerland in 1767, this is quite possible.

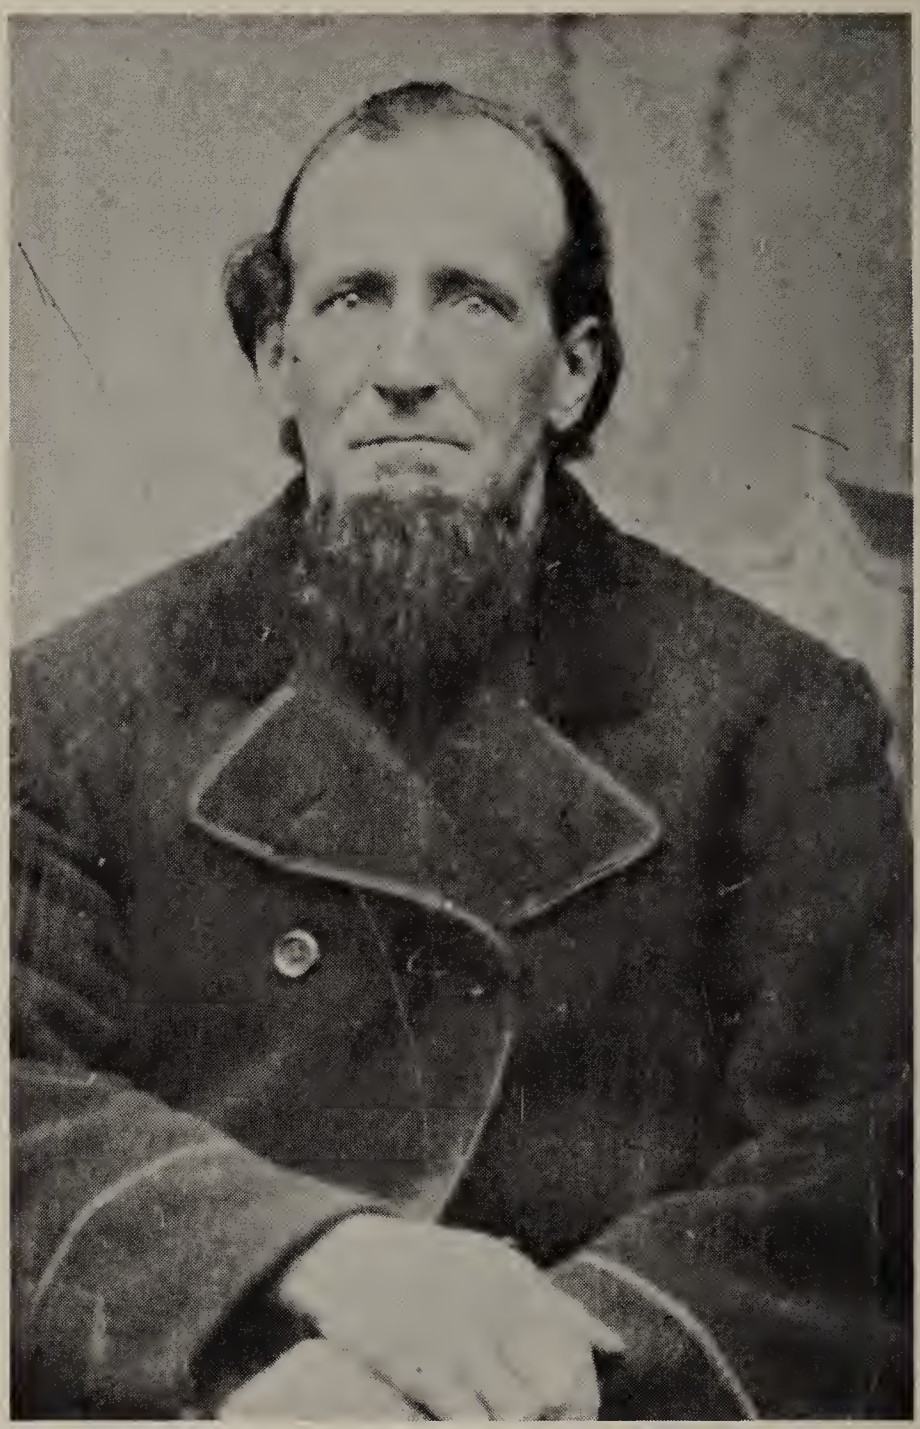
Joel B. Miller Farm

Map showing location of Joel B. Miller farm, two miles north of Grantsville, Maryland (near Maryland Route 417), presently owned by his grandson, Amos J. Yoder (fam. 485). Map by Floyd J. Miller (fam. 333). This map was prepared approximately one month before the death of the artist.



Elias J. Miller

Elias J. Miller, known as Eli (fam. 211) inherited much of his father's artistry in wood. Today numerous tables, chairs, bedsteads, bureaus, reels and spinning wheels, picture frames and other household articles of beauty and usefulness made by this artisan are found in many homes in the Casselman Valley and in the Springs Museum. Eli shared with his brother Dan the facial characteristics of the Brennemans, but has the high forehead of his father's family.

Christian J. Miller

Christian J. Miller (fam. 421), known to his contemporaries as Crist, was the youngest son of Joel B. For years Crist assisted his brother Eli in his planing mill on the Casselman River in Shade Hollow. Since he moved to Ohio early in life, and then on to California, his two descendants have become somewhat disconnected from the rest of the clan. One of the most distinctive features possessed by this Miller descendant was his remarkable blue eyes of unusual clarity. In physique, stature, and even facial features Crist seems to have inherited much from his grandmother Catherine (Beachy) Miller, wife of Benedict.

Samuel J. Miller School Attendance Roll 1858

Above is a reproduction from the original school attendance roll of the Springs School in the year of 1858, Samuel J. Miller (fam. No. 2) teacher. The old log school in which he taught stood on the northeast corner of the crossroads in Springs, Pa. A cement block garage now stands over part of the old foundation. According to the dates in the record, school was held six days a week. Samuel, the teacher, was 24 years of age at this time. Three of his brothers and one sister were among his pupils; Daniel (fam. 137) age 22; Joel (fam. 312) age 14 Catherine (fam. 402) age 10; and Christian (fam. 421) age 8. Many of us will recognize the names of others on the school roll.

The copy was furnished by Salome Beachy Nafziger, (fam. 113) of Gordonville, Pa., who owns the original.

Daniel J. Miller

This four-generation photo of Daniel J. Miller and his descendants appears to be the only one of its kind among the sons and daughters of Joel B. Miller. Daniel was one of the most prolific and versatile of Joel B's sons, in production of inventions and articles for use in the pioneer home and on the farm. Daniel's son Gideon (seated, left) inherited a double measure of the inventive and mechanical genius of his father Daniel and his grandfather Joel B. Miller.

The four generations in the photo are as follows: Daniel J. Miller (fam. 137); Gideon D. Miller (fam. 138); Dwight L. Miller (fam. 139); and Lowell E. Miller (fam. 140).

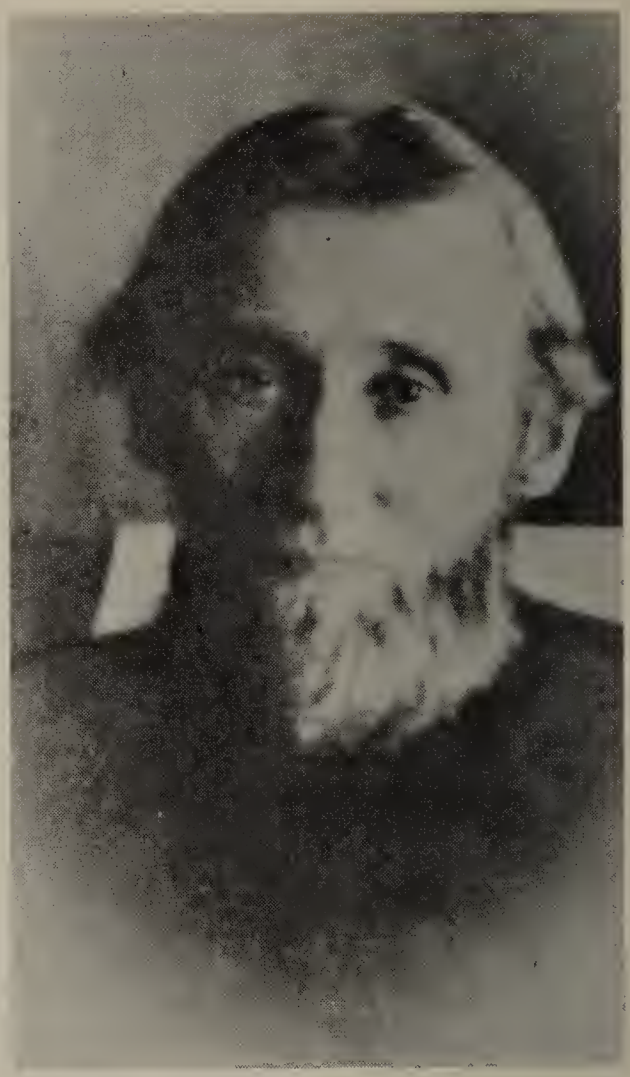
Antique automobile by Milton D. Miller

This antique automobile was built by Milton D. Miller (fam. 145), grandson of Joel B., at the turn of the century, in Meyersdale, Pa., where he lived at the time. The photo was taken about 1901. Milton is shown holding the steering bar which was used to steer the car instead of a steering wheel.

Seated with him is his son Nevin (fam. 145.1) and his daughter Ola. On the rear seat is his wife Alice (in the foreground) holding their son Weldon (fam. 145.2). Seated with her is Mrs. William D. Miller (fam. 146). William was employed by Milton in his shop. Milton made every part of the car, which was steam-driven. He made the boiler and engine, wheels and seats, with all the little rungs around the seats.

The tank under the front contained water for the steam boiler which was made with many very small copper tubes running from upper to lower end of the boiler. The glass gauge is seen on the side. Gasoline was used as fuel to produce steam. Milt made the burner which had many holes in it to feed the gas. The holes were 1/32" in diameter.

This information was furnished by Milton's brother, Edward D. Miller (fam. 190) of Inwood, W. Va.



Catherine and Elias M. Miller

Catherine Miller, wife of Elias M. Miller (fam. 402) who was locally known as Strawberry Eli ("Erdbera Ale"), was one of the most creative and versatile daughters of Joel B. Miller. Her imagination and ingenuity led her into many fields of activity quite uncommon to the housewife of her day, and her encouragement also led her husband into pioneer endeavors, such as growing the first strawberries of the area, installing the first bathtub, and wiring for the first telephone. No photographs of Catherine's three sisters (Mary, Elizabeth, and Annie) can be found in the area, but it is agreed by all who knew her that Catherine herself depicted not only the Miller personality, but also the facial characteristics of her father and the clan in general.

Joel J. Miller

Joel J. Miller (fam. 312), son of Joel B., was farmer, artisan, churchman and leader of the Amish Mennonite Church of the Casselman Valley during the schism of 1895. Although the greatest contribution of Joel J. lay in his churchmanship and community leadership, the Springs Museum does contain a number of household articles produced by his apt fingers. Joel J. was the sire of a large clan of descendants who demonstrate to an unusual degree the artistic and creative tendencies of the Millers. There are among them writers and poets; artists in oil, metal, stone, and wood; and a number of teachers. It has often been said by those who knew the father of Joel J. (our common ancestor Joel B.) that the former most resembled his worthy sire in appearance.

Benedict Miller Sale

A page from the list of articles of property sold at the sale ("vendue") of the late Benedict Miller, father of Joel B. Miller. The sale was held July 14, 1837, a little more than a month after Benedict passed away. The handwriting is that of our ancestor Joel B. Miller. He was one of the administrators of his father's estate. (The above is one of seven pages of articles sold, with purchasers. The total amount of the sale was $860.51.)

Genealogy

Introduction

There are 503 families recorded in this genealogy since our ancestor Joel B. Miller. There are 47 families where both husband and wife are descendants. Had either spouse married someone who was not a descendant, this book would have contained 550 families. The above total of families is higher than the last family number in the book. The reason for this is some new families came in after the number system was set up, therefore we assigned decimal numbers rather than changing the whole number system.

A number is assigned to each family head which appears at the beginning of each family, and is used for reference elsewhere throughout the book in tracing ancestry or descendants.

The first name in each family is the husband or wife's maiden name who is a direct descendant of Joel B. Miller, and the second name is the marriage partner. The first number following the name is the generation number since Joel B. Miller, who is considered the first generation in this history. The second number to the right of the name is the number of the family into which he or she was born. If both husband and wife are descendants, the two sets of numbers will follow each name.

The number following the names of the marriage partner's parents, is the number of the family where they may be found in another family history. The number DBH-3817 indicates that this party may be found in Descendants of Barbara Hochstedler, family No. 3817.

To find a family in this book, find the name of the descendant in the index, which also lists the name of the marriage partner and their family number. Then turn to that paragraph number where you will find this party.
